FLYAWAY HAIR:
Rachel Rocero's papers and freshly curled hair flutter in the wind on Tuesday as she waits for a friend to pick her up at the downtown Caltrain station. Tuesday's winds were strong enough that the National Weather Service issued a wind advisory, and power was knocked out for dozens of Mountain View residents Tuesday night. See story p.5.

City employees may be asked to take pay cut
By Daniel DeBolt
Mountain View officials are in talks with the city's labor groups about ways to ease the impact of a projected $6 million budget deficit — and one of those ways involves reining in salary increases.
The city's 600-plus employees may be asked to forgo at least a portion of pay raises for next year, though talks have not reached any specific proposals. Any pay cut would be voluntary for most of the city's unions, as all of them have contracts locked in for the next year, with the exception of the SEIU, which represents most of the city's lowest paid workers.
The current deficit arose after the economic recession caused city revenues to decline despite rising costs. Among those rising costs, personnel expenses are climbing at a rate of about $3.8 million a year, a cost which will compound if solutions are not found, warns city manager Kevin Duggan.
For his part, Duggan, who currently makes $251,125 a year, is refusing a pay increase that could total about $20,000.

National legal group targets Worker Center
By Daniel DeBolt
Escuela Avenue residents have called in a legal group from Washington, D.C. to "protect" their neighborhood from a proposed Day Worker Center, and a representative from the group met with neighbors this week.
In an e-mail, Escuela resident Brad Keller said the group Judicial Watch is concerned "that the DWC facility may, in violation of U.S. federal immigration law, support undocumented workers and employers of undocumented workers, and that local cities may be using citizens’ tax dollars to support these activities."
Judicial Watch has already sued other California cities for supporting day worker centers and lost, according to Maria Marroquin, director of the Day Worker Center of Mountain View.
"Judicial Watch represents the legal arm of the nativist vigilante movement in this country," said Chris Newman, a lawyer with the National Day Laborer Organizing Network. "They in no way

What do you think of the Obama’s new dog?

“I just hope he’s a rescue dog or from a shelter. Our dog Baxter is.”
Daniel Zavala, Stanford

Thomas Hargreaves, San Jose

“I don’t really care. I don’t really follow that stuff.”
Daren Chow, San Jose

“I think he’s really cute, and I like how he’s small so you can pick him up and cuddle him.”
Margarita Golod, Sunnyvale

DOWNED LINE TAKES HOURS TO REPAIR — SIMILAR STORY THROUGHOUT REGION

By Casey Weiss

Nearly 200 residents in Mountain View had no electricity Tuesday night after gale-force winds knocked over a power line on Oak Avenue. By Wednesday morning their power was restored following an eight-hour outage, a PG&E spokesperson said.

A similar story played out all over the Bay Area, as winds Tuesday and Wednesday reached up to 60 miles per hour in parts of the region. In all, more than 25,800 PG&E customers in the Bay Area went without power on Tuesday night and Wednesday morning due to a series of wind-related outages, according to Pacific Gas & Electric Co. spokesperson Paul Moreno.

In Mountain View, a tree fell onto a power line on the 1300 block of Oak Avenue on Tuesday at around 5:45 p.m., leaving 187 residents without power until early Wednesday morning, Moreno said.

The outages appear to have been caused by powerful winds that swept through the region Tuesday and Wednesday. A strong wind advisory was in effect beginning on Tuesday morning, and drivers of high-profile vehicles were warned that the gusts could make driving dangerous.

Most of the outages started at about 4 p.m. Tuesday, said PG&E spokesman J.D. Guidi. As of press time on Wednesday, about 1,300 PG&E customers in the Bay Area still were without power, but Moreno said power was slowly returning to most customers.

County poet laureate looks to you for muse

By Casey Weiss

Santa Clara County’s poet laureate is encouraging residents to participate in an exercise to create the first Santa Clara County poem in celebration of National Poetry Month.

Nils Peterson, a professor at San Jose State University, is asking residents young and old to try to capture the essence of the area in a line between nine and 13 syllables long.

“If you begin each day with the intention of writing a line of poetry, you will be in the world differently,” Peterson said. “Try it. I think you’ll find it fun and rewarding.”

Peterson will create a word collage composed of 100 lines that showcases the spirit of Santa Clara County.

Participants can send their line to Peterson through May 3 at poet.laureate@eco.sccgov.org, or by mail to Santa Clara County Poet Laureate, Office of Public Affairs, County of Santa Clara, 11th Floor East Wing, 70 W. Hedding St., San Jose, 95110.

HOSPITAL EXECS HAVE PROFITABLE OUTLOOK FOR NEW OPERATION AFTER FIRST YEAR

By Casey Weiss

It was an “end of an era” last week as El Camino Hospital officially took over the Community Hospital of Los Gatos and prepared to extend its services and staff to the new property.

The acquisition will require a $103 million investment, hospital officials say, including capital costs over the next five years. Officials have closed the facility temporarily and will reopen it, they hope, by mid-July.

El Camino staff will run the Los Gatos hospital as a sister site offering basic services such as an emergency department and operating rooms. Staff also will focus on orthopedic, spine, heart and vascular care, cancer and urology at the Los Gatos facility, according to Eric Pifer, who has been named president of the new hospital.

A new name has officially been chosen for the facility: El Camino Hospital Los Gatos.

“This is an end of the era when El Camino Hospital is just one campus,” hospital CEO Ken Graham told the board of directors during its April 8 meeting, prior to the April 11 closing.

Hospital executives announced in December that they had entered into an escrow agreement to buy the facility, but said strict disclosure rules prevented them from releasing key details to the public. That decision did not sit well with the few dozen local residents who opposed the purchase and said the public hospital had an obligation to share details with taxpayers before committing to pay for the purchase price and upgrades to the aging facility.

But those opposed were nowhere in sight on April 8 as Pifer told board members that El Camino’s financial model was on track and the hospital expected to be profitable by the end of the first year of operation.

CHASE GROUP OFFERS WAYS TO AVOID DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE

In the two years since Mountain View High School graduate Chase Rogers died from a cocaine overdose, locals have been using the memory of the 18-year-old to help keep other local teens away from drugs and alcohol.

After Rogers was found dead in a San Jose school yard in December 2006, his story served as an eye-opener for other Los Altos residents who wanted to reach out to teens with similar problems. They launched Community Hope and Sober Events (CHASE) in January 2007, just a month after Rogers died.

In the last two years, the nonprofit has grown, now reaching out to Mountain View and Los Altos Hills with presentations for families and parents, weekend events for students and discussions in local schools.

NEWS BRIEFS

TWO CHARGED WITH ASSAULT USING BOTTLE, SCREWDRIVER

Police arrested two “associated gang members” on charges of assault with a deadly weapon after the young men allegedly attacked a group of juveniles with a screwdriver and a broken beer bottle last Saturday.

Police say the two suspects, Pascal Pinzon, 18, and Miguel Aragon, 20, both Mountain View residents, are affiliated with the local Sureno gang, and initiated the fight on April 11 with five juveniles who were hanging out at an apartment complex on the 1900 block of California Street. The suspects believe the complex “is their territory,” said police spokesperson Liz Wylie, and the fight started after they told the teenagers to leave. None of the victims are associated with gangs, Wylie said.

Pinzon and Aragon approached the teens at around 6 p.m., immediately punching one 16-year-old female suspect in the chest, according to Wylie. The fight escalated when Aragon started attacking another male suspect with a broken beer bottle and a screwdriver, she said.

A witness tried to break up the fight, and was also attacked by the suspects, Wylie said, but he punched out Pinzon before police arrived. Pinzon was taken to Stanford Hospital, where he was treated for injuries and released to police. Both suspects are charged with battery and assault with a deadly weapon, and Aragon also faces charges for resisting arrest and possession of cocaine.

The main victim, who was attacked with the two weapons, was treated at El Camino Hospital for minor injuries.

UNARMED ROBBER TAKES $5,000 FROM BOFA

Mountain View police are looking for a man who they say stole about $5,000 from the Bank of America inside Lucky grocery store during an unarmed robbery on Tuesday afternoon.

Police say the man entered the store, located on the 700 block of East El Camino Real, and handed the bank teller a note demanding money. He took the cash and fled in a white car, according to witnesses. No one was hurt.

The robber is described as a black male in his mid to late 20s with a tall and skinny build. He was wearing white boots, a white baseball cap, dark sunglasses, a light jacket and dark pants at the time of the crime.

CONVICTION REINSTATED IN ‘76 MURDER CASE

The California Supreme Court last Thursday reinstated the first-degree murder conviction of a Sunnyvale man in the strangling and rape of a Mountain View woman 33 years ago.

Gary Dean Story was convicted in Santa Clara County Superior Court in 2005 of murdering Betty Vickers, 26, who was found strangled in her Mountain View apartment in 1976. He was sentenced to 25 years to life in prison. Story and Vickers were coworkers in the production department of the Wall Street Journal in Palo Alto.

Story was not charged with the murder until 2002, after the case was reopened and investigators found that two of his ex-wives would testify he had told them he had killed someone. In Thursday’s ruling, the state high court in San Francisco unanimously overturned a decision by the state Court of Appeal in San Jose last year that set aside the conviction.

Freeway express-lane project speeds ahead

NEW TOLL POLICY WILL ALLOW SOLO DRIVERS IN CARPOOL LANES — FOR A PRICE

By Sue Drennan

U nder a plan for State Highway 85 and U.S. Highway 101, carpool lanes will be converted into express toll lanes, allowing solo drivers with FasTrak transponders to drive in the fast lane at any time.

Toll rates have not been determined, but similar express-lane projects across the country have fees ranging from $1 to $10, based on time of day, the distance driven and the level of traffic in the express lane.

Cars with two or more occupants, motorcycles, transit buses and eligible hybrid vehicles can still drive in the lanes for free, according to Santa Clara Valley Transportation Authority, which will set the toll price.

The VTA board approved the project in December. A final vote by the board on the designs of the express lanes will take place later this year. Caltrans and the California Highway Patrol will also have input into the designs of Highways 85 and 101.

The express lanes on Highway 85 will run its entire 24-mile length and would open in 2012. Highway 101 might have two express lanes in each direction, which would stretch 41 miles from Morgan Hill to Whipple Road in Redwood City, according to the VTA.

The express lanes on Highway 85 will help lower pollution by reducing the number of vehicles stuck idling in traffic.

The VTA claims the lanes will help lower pollution by reducing the number of vehicles stuck idling in traffic.

The VTA claims the lanes will help lower pollution by reducing the number of vehicles stuck idling in traffic. In a study by engineers at the University of Central Florida, Calif., reported a 40-minute cut in their commute times when using the express lanes on a 10-mile toll road.

On April 20 the California State Assembly will hold a hearing on Assembly Bill 744, which would authorize the Bay Area Toll Authority to acquire, construct, administer and operate the express-lane-network program on state highways in the nine-county Bay Area. The VTA was authorized to implement the express lane project by the state Legislature in 2004 and 2007.

shows a $1 million net income in the first year, $9 million the second year and earnings of $10 million to $11 million in each of the next three years of operations in Los Gatos. Achieving those numbers will require an average of 42 patients a day in the first six months and 39 patients a day for the year, he said.

According to the model, to reach the census numbers will require “a very strong focus on opening in mid-summer and maintaining and growing physicians’ relationships” in Los Gatos.

Hospital officials project a 25 percent return on the $65 million initial investment after the first year, and say the total investment will be $103 million over five years. That includes $22 million to perform seismic retrofitting work required by the state.

“I think the proof of the pudding is if anyone will show up,” Graham told trustees last week before escrow was finalized.

Graham has said El Camino has $400 million in cash reserves and a balance sheet of $1.1 billion.

Buying the new hospital, executives said, allows them to compete with other local hospitals and to meet their strategic goals by moving business southward. Taxpayer funds, paid by residents of the hospital district, will not be used for the new purchase, hospital officials said.

The hospital’s business model of attracting 42 patients a day is a realistic goal, Pifer said, especially considering Los Gatos will open with 113 beds. The hospital also has a 30-bed rehabilitation center, and officials are now considering opening this soon.

Business was slipping under the hospital’s previous operators, but Pifer said the hospital averaged over 60 patients a day several years ago.

The plan “is primarily based on getting back to numbers the hospital has had over the last several years,” he said.

To accomplish this, Pifer said, it’s important that the hospital opens in mid-summer, and he and a management team are in the process of hiring doctors and setting up programs. The hospital has received over 200 physician applications. As it prepares to reopen, El Camino staff is also focusing on bringing software to the new site and getting the clinical programs up and running.
ADVANCING THE HEALTH OF CHILDREN THROUGH INNOVATION.

When Ryan underwent a splenectomy at Lucile Packard Children’s Hospital, he walked away without a scar. Packard Children’s is the first in the nation to implement single-port surgery, a revolutionary procedure in which a single keyhole incision is made through the bellybutton, leaving no visible scar. Going in through the bellybutton, Packard doctors have been able to remove gall bladders and appendixes in addition to spleens, while keeping the self-esteem of kids intact. It’s innovation like this that allows kids like Ryan to truly move on after sickness, which is what healing is all about.

teens struggling with substance abuse. With the help of the Rogers family, she asked the Los Altos City Council for a $5,000 grant to launch CHASE. The nonprofit was up and running just months after Rogers died.

“No one should have to go through what Chase’s family went through,” Lodesto told a group of community leaders last week. “We need some positive changes.”

The nonprofit started small in 2007, but now has a $200,000 county grant over three years, one full-time employee and runs counseling programs in six local schools. After receiving the county money, CHASE hired Alicia Crank, a former Mountain View Human Relations Commissioner, as the nonprofit’s program director. She has been instrumental in bringing the programs to Mountain View.

CHASE members hope to decrease teen drug and alcohol use partially through “social norming,” a psychological approach based on the theory that people set their own behavior based on what they think others are doing. Often teenagers have the false perception that many of their peers are drinking and doing drugs, when in fact the percentage is relatively small, Lodesto said.

Crank said the nonprofit is modeling its programs on an experiment in Fort Collins, Colo. after that city saw a rise in drunk driving accidents. Students started putting signs up around their campus, saying that 84 percent of teenagers in the city did not drink and drive.

“It was very grassroots,” Crank said. “We held a seminar about social norming for parents and families last month, but staff also hope to give students an alternative to drinking and drugs through weekend activities and campus groups.

For example: On many Friday nights CHASE holds a knitting group with local teens.

“It’s very grassroots,” Crank said of the program. “But they do this on a Friday night instead of going out and partying.”

Crank said the group attracts all type of students, from “needs” to “jocks,” many of whom have already experimented with drugs and alcohol. The group went to San Francisco earlier this year to hand out knitted clothes and garments to homeless people in the Tenderloin. As part of its outreach, CHASE also sponsors Teen Talk!, a program at six local middle school and high school campuses where students meet with counselors from the Community Health Awareness Council to discuss peer pressure, drugs, alcohol and other issues. “It’s a secure area for them to talk about drugs and alcohol,” Crank said of Teen Talk! The nonprofit intends to continue offering community events, and is planning a party at the Los Altos Plaza on June 14, Rogers’ birthday, in memory of the teenager. have been involved in proffering solutions. Instead they are intent on generating problems for local communities in order to make a political point that would be better served if it was made on the national level.

Kellar says Judicial Watch has been following Mountain View and its Day Worker Center over the last year, and is meeting with neighbors as part of a campaign to bust “sanctuary cities” which actively protect illegal immigrants from deportation.

Chris Farrell, director of research for Judicial Watch, met with local residents to discuss the Day Worker Center and other Judicial Watch campaigns on Wednesday at the Residence Inn Marriott in Los Altos. Speaking at Tuesday’s council meeting, Farrell cited a federal law that he interprets as saying that “If you encourage or induce a person here illegally to work in the country, that’s illegal.”

City attorney Michael Martello says the law could be interpreted to say illegal immigrants shouldn’t be allowed medical care, education or to even get on a bus, but instead the courts have ruled in favor of day worker centers. He says there is no legal problem with the city giving the center a lease deal for a parking lot on city property next to 113 Escuela Ave.

Because of its English classes and other services, the Day Worker Center is a “community center,” Martello said, that serves “many folks, including those that may be undocumented.”

Neighbors are calling the center a “sanctuary city.” Police here are not prohibited from contacting Immigration and Customs Enforcement if necessary.

Police Chief Scott Vermeer told the Voice in June 2007 that local police have “no role enforcing federal immigration laws... unless the safety of the general public is at stake.”

Despite rumors to the contrary, Martello says, city officials have never declared Mountain View a “sanctuary city.”

Curb enthusiasm

By Daniel DeBlog

The City Council unanimously made an exception to the rules Tuesday, allowing the Rex Manor neighborhood to keep its much-loved rolled curbs.

The city was preparing to rebuild 10 streets and sidewalks in the area — just north of Central Expressway between Burgoyne and Farley streets — when public outcry over the benefits of the rolled curbs caused city staff to reconsider the idea, eventually recommending an exception to the city standard.

A city survey found that 78 percent of the neighborhood supported rolled curbs, and only 15 percent preferred vertical curbs.

“In our experience and for our neighborhood, rolled curbs fit. They suit our needs,” said Rich Tanner, a Rex Manor resident.

The rolled curbs allow a flatter sidewalk with no dips for driveways, and homeowners have made use of the resulting flexibility, relocating driveways without changing the sidewalk.

But to some, the flexibility can be a bad thing, letting drivers park their cars on sidewalks and lawns. Misuse of the curbs can happen, city staff said.

The city’s standard vertical curbs could provide a little more safety for sidewalk users, as it is harder for a car to jump a vertical curb.

Several council members said they were fans of rolled curbs, including Tom Means, who said that as a kid who grew up with rolled curbs he found they were better for floating boats down the gutter in the rain.

A city survey found that 78 percent of the neighborhood supported rolled curbs.

BUDGET

ing the Firefighter’s Association, have been meeting with the city manager to figure out how to address the budget issues more specifically.

Duggan contends that the “leaves in the air” budget cuts have already been made, but union representatives and some council members think there may be alternatives to some of his proposals, which include closing the library one day a week and cutting three police officer positions. Specific budget proposals will be presented on May 3.

“We have and we are continuing to work with city staff to try and find a solution to this,” said John Miguel, president of the Mountain View Firefighters Association. “We were in meetings as late as yesterday [Monday] regarding this and what could be done.”

Next week the city is set to begin contract negotiations with the SEIU, whose contract is set to expire in June. At this point the union, which represents employees in nearly every city department, is still gathering information about the city’s budget situation.

“Everybody [at SEIU] is on board to at least be a part of the solution, if there is a problem,” said Chris Costanzo, chapter chair. “We’re not going to stick our heads in the sand — we really want to understand” the situation.

Mayor Margaret Abe-Koga expressed concern that the city’s lowest paid employees could be strong-armed into forgoing salary increases while the groups that have contracts would not have to.

“This needs to be a group effort, we can’t single out one group,” Abe-Koga said.

To patch the $6 million deficit in the $89 general fund budget next year, Duggan has proposed cutting the city budget by $4 million and filling the rest of the gap with $2 million of the city’s $38 million in reserves. The cuts would likely mean elimination of staff positions, but whether that can be done without layoffs is unclear. Duggan aims to reduce staff through attrition.

If city employees agree to forgo pay raises, it wouldn’t be the first time. In 2003-04, non-public safety employees took a pass on cost-of-living adjustments, agreeing instead to a $700 lump sum and additional time off. In 2004-05, the city did not provide pay raises.

“Now I’m just saying forget about it, to set an example basically,” Duggan said. Given the state of the economy and how it has affected people, “I simply don’t think it is an appropriate time for me to accept such increases.”

Duggan says city department heads have expressed interest in forgoing similar pay raises. City attorney Michael Martello said he hasn’t decided whether he’ll forgo his pay raise yet.

“Certainly if a critical mass [of city employees] is going to do it I would certainly go along with it,” Martello said, adding that it wouldn’t be for “symbolism” but to make a “real difference” and continue the city’s tradition of being a year ahead of other cities in anticipating budget problems.

Interest-based’ approach, he said, which involves department heads negotiating with a team of city staff who are SEIU members. He said this is cheaper and may be less contentious than “position-based” bargaining, which in the past required the city to pay for an outside attorney to mediate negotiations.

For his part, Duggan, who currently makes $251,125 a year, is refusing a pay increase that could total about $20,000. He was scheduled to receive a 3.2 percent cost-of-living adjustment in July and an additional merit pay increase of up to 5 percent.

“I’m just saying forget about it, to set an example basically,” Duggan said. Given the state of the economy and how it has affected people, “I simply don’t think it is an appropriate time for me to accept such increases.”

Balancing the budget will take sacrifices

W e’re not sure if other managers and rank-and-file city employees will voluntarily join Kevin Duggan in giving up his cost-of-living adjustment and salary increase to help close the city’s $6 million budget gap. But they should.

To be sure, at $250,000–plus a year, the city manager’s gesture is more symbolic than truly painful. By comparison, the city’s lower-paid workers are undoubtedly in great need of whatever salary boost they can get. Even the middle and upper managers — the 200 or so city employees who make over $100,000 a year — probably are more reliant on those raises.

But the idea is sound. Without counting benefits, compensation alone for all city employees has gone up 16 percent ($8.5 million) in the last two years. It is easy to see why city employees should volunteer to at least give up some of the cost-of-living increases due to kick in this July.

Just like a private business that must make ends meet, the city is facing tough decisions during the economic downturn. Costs keep going up and Duggan estimates the city’s income will remain stagnant for the next few years. If personnel costs continue to rise and nothing is done, the city could have a $15 million deficit by 2012, and will either have to use reserves to pay its bills, lay off workers or cut basic services.

Another course, as the city manager suggests, is to hold back on pay and cost-of-living increases for as long as possible. Coupled with other possible cuts that he laid out to the City Council last week, the city could conceivably bring its spending into line with revenues without cutting positions.

The council members, at least three of whom were less enthusiastic about the city manager’s plans, want more information, as do the city’s unions. But we fear that few alternatives to painful sacrifices will be found.

If the city manager can eliminate at least a good chunk of the expected deficit by convincing most city employees to forgo the pending increases, it will be tremendously helpful in balancing next year’s budget. We urge the city’s employees to facilitate the process, as they did in 2003–04.

This year, however, the situation is just as drastic, if not more so. City employees have enjoyed substantial pay increases during the last few years, and today, with few other options before us, it seems appropriate for them to make sacrifices where possible to help Mountain View weather this economic crisis.
Almost Mexican
REPOSADO IN PALO ALTO IS URBANE AND STYLISH, BUT FOOD NEEDS VOLUME TURNED UP

By Dale F. Bentson

If I could write two reviews of Reposado, the first appraisal would applaud the stylish decor, the vivid, generous portions, the attentive service and the choice of four dozen or more tequilas.

The second review, though, would take issue with the food. Not that it isn’t pleasant; it just isn’t south-of-the-border enough for my palate, and nearly everything registers low on the taste-o-meter. I want the volume turned up; I crave goat, not short ribs.

I want the food to be assertive in my mouth and scream “Mexican cuisine” with its ingenious layers and combinations of spices and herbs, that collision of unusual textures, rare aromas and incomparable taste sensations. I’d like Reposado to underline why Mexican is among the world’s greatest cuisines.

Despite what I think, owner Rob Fischer told me that a number of patrons still send back their orders because the food is just too spicy for them.

It’s hard to believe that here in Foodieville, U.S.A., anyone’s palate is still so dumbed-down, so uneducated and so unappreciative of the glories of food. OK,
The Ceviche de Camaron at Reposado restaurant features prawn ceviche with lime and cucumber juice, Serrano chili, avocado and grilled pineapple.

Fischer said in an interview, Reposado is housed on Hamilton Avenue in downtown Palo Alto, in the home of the long-gone Cafe Verona. Fischer spent big and the result is a striking, stylish, restaurant/bar that caught on as soon as it opened.

The architecture stresses open, airy and elemental with concrete walls and ebony-colored floor, high-beamed ceiling and a mezzanine for overflow dining and private parties.

Reposado’s Pollo en Mole Poblano features chicken with a mole poblano sauce and is served with chayote vegetable hash and red rice.

chicken breast blanketed in mole poblano sauce. Mole poblano is a classic and complex Mexican sauce made from chilies and spices, seeds and nuts, often with a hint of chocolate. The finished sauce is rich and fragrant, leaving a sweet to bittersweet resonance in the mouth. Reposado’s version of pollo en mole poblano was too sweet for my taste, too bright red to my eye. It covered the chicken more like marinara than mole. It was tasty in a nondescript way but the lovely layers of chilies never manifested.

Better was the rotisserie chicken ($16.50) with pumpkin seed sauce and red rice. The fleshy fowl was delicious and the kitchen rotisserie, visible from the dining room, seduced the appetite. The sauce was simpler here, and, I suppose, my expectation level was different.

Pescado asado ($16.75) was my favorite plate. Grilled red snapper, marinated in achiote (a rust-colored seed, slightly sweet and peppery) was served with jicama-mango pico de gallo and green rice. The fleshy and sweet fish tasted ocean-fresh. The pico de gallo sauce was delightfully citrusy and nicely balanced the snapper.

The desserts were excellent, especially the Azteca chocolate cake ($6.75) — moist and rich with Mexican chocolate sauce, lime sabayon and ancho chili honey. A pleasing hint of chili lingered on the tongue.
