CHINESE BRUSH PAINTER HAS A DEVOTED GROUP OF STUDENTS ON THE PENINSULA — AND A MUSEUM NAMED AFTER HIM IN CHINA

By Adena DeMonte

Lively discussion alternates between Mandarin and English as excited students in Paul Pei-Jen Hau's Saturday morning Chinese brush painting class share stories of their recent travels to China.

Since 1956, Chinese-American artist Hau has taught adult students at the Pacific Art League in Palo Alto the techniques of brush painting, and the importance of having a good spirit in order to be an artist. Some of his students, most of whom are Chinese-American, have learned from him for upward of 30 years.

But Hau's popularity extends beyond the mid-Peninsula. His paintings, which combine a colorful softness that resembles air-brushed graffiti with the sections of tight detail seen in traditional Chinese brush painting, have appeared in such American museums and galleries as the San Jose Museum of Art and De Young Museum in San Francisco.

In his native China, his work displayed even more broadly, and a museum has been founded in his name.

The HouBeiRen Art Museum, which opened in 2002, is located in the city of Kunshan, Jiangsu Province, in eastern China. It displays 300 pieces of Hau's work, as well as pieces from his collection, done by such noted Chinese artists as Zhang Daqian and Fu Baoshi.

Hau, who is 90, recently visited the museum with nine of his students on a trip to China. During the two-week trip, the group also viewed the mountainous landscapes that inspire his work. They captured the sights for later use in their paintings by making quick pencil sketches in their journals as they hiked through the Huang Mountains.

It is apparent that Hau's students view him as a master of his craft and one of the best artists in China.

"We all think our teacher's style is the best one in China, but teacher is so modest he won't let us say it," said Theresa Lin, an eight-year student. "In China, the [brush painting artists] all have this bottleneck; they are trying to break through but they don't know which way to go. But here we have a master, who has his own style that is so contemporary and so soothing."

"I think it's pretty amazing we have a world-class teacher here at the Pacific Art League," James Eckman of Mountain View said.

Chinese art critics note that Hau's work is different from his contemporaries in China, largely because of the Western influence seen in his paintings. He uses bold color washes in vibrant blues, reds, oranges, grays, browns and greens. The resulting work is distinct from traditional Chinese brush painting, which is known for its tight stroked landscapes in black ink.

Explaining his teaching techniques, Hau says it is important for his students to first look at nature before dipping their brushes into colored ink and making the first stroke on the page. He often very important things. First, you must be outside and look at nature, study the nature — if you never see the flowers you cannot paint the flowers," Hau said. "Then come back inside the room and draw what you see, because this time the painting comes from your heart, your mind."

Spirit and mind go hand-in-hand in Chinese culture, a concept he imparts to his students, he says.

"He taught us to be an artist you have to regulate yourself, you need to have a good spirit, to be good-hearted. It will show on the painting," Lin said. "Mr. Hau's painting critic said because he has a big heart, you'll look at his painting; it is very broad and the vision is very far. It is more open, more free, so deep, sending signals and waves to you."

Born into a family of artists in Haicheng County in the north-eastern Liaoning Province in 1917, Hau learned early on that he had talent in the visual arts. His interests spanned the humanities: poetry, music and calligraphy.

His first painting teacher was Li Zongchang, a famous painter in Hebei Province, with whom he learned basic techniques of Chinese painting. When he went to study social sciences at the teaches students how to paint the flowers of traditional Chinese art, plum, bamboo, chrysanthemums and orchids. Or he will demonstrate landscape painting based on mountains in China or Yosemite National Park, which he says has a landscape similar to his homeland.

Celia Fushille-Burke in "The Blue Angel"

Dance for the ears

BALLET CHOREOGRAPHER MICHAEL SMUIN DOESN'T MIND IF AUDIENCES SING ALONG

By Adena DeMonte

Whether creating a narrative dance performed to Willie Nelson or Frank Sinatra songs, or a non-linear piece set to a choral Stravinsky work in Latin, Smuin Ballet choreographer Michael Smuin dives head-first into the score.

He learns every note, every lyric and meaning prior to choreographing a new piece. While few of his works start with a story, the majority of his ballets are inspired by a specific tune.

"Music always takes you in the direction of what you want to say," said the Tony Award-winning Smuin, who has choreographed for both stage and screen. "If you listen to the music, the composers, it tells you what to do."

The San Francisco-based Smuin Ballet will travel to Mountain View this month, with shows featuring a diverse grouping of Smuin's works and one of the final on-stage performances of longtime company member ballerina Celia Fushille-Burke.

From May 31 through June 4, the 16 dancers will present the dances "The Blue Angel," "Fly Me to the Moon," and "Symphony of Psalms."

"Symphony," Smuin's second world premiere of the season, will be performed to the Stravinsky score of the same name, in a recording of London's Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Robert Craft. Smuin discovered the music in 1970, when he attended a live performance conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

Meanwhile, "Fly Me to the Moon," performed against a glowing backdrop of the night sky, features many of Sinatra's standard tunes. The work made its world premiere at the Palace of Fine Arts Theatre in San Francisco in October 2004, and Smuin said it has been a favorite among audiences. The piece has also been performed in New York and Italy.

"I think American music is great. They're tiny little masterpieces in themselves," Smuin said.

Sometimes the audience begins to sing along with Sinatra's tunes during the ballet, Smuin said.

"If they get involved and burst out singing, that's just fine with me. They don't have to watch either. If you don't like the ballet, just shut your eyes and listen to the music."

In the third piece of the trio, "The Blue Angel," ballerina Fushille-Burke stars in the role of Lola-Lola — her final performances before retiring from the stage.

The piece uses the cabaret songs of Friedrich Hollander, and is based on Joseph von Sternberg's 1930 film about Marlene Dietrich's narcissistic talent for always getting what she wants.

Getting what she wants has been a lifetime balancing act for Fushille-Burke, who has performed 113 roles with Smuin over the past 12 years while taking care of her two children, working as the associate director of the Smuin Ballet, and attending school part-time to earn her bachelor's degree.

"It was definitely a juggling act," Fushille-Burke said. "There were some years where I'd get to the end of a season and I'd look back at my agenda and I'd think, 'How did I survive another year?' On top of my dancing schedule, rehearsing, performing and traveling, I'd have to line up the carpools to soccer and piano and leave meals frozen in the freezer."

Even as she plans to continue on as Smuin's associate director, Fushille-Burke says she knows it's the right time to conclude her stage career.

"Our schedule is a very grueling schedule, dancing seven or eight shows a week, and it just gets harder and harder when you get older. I see why Barry Bonds doesn't do a day game after a night game," she said. "I think in a lot of ways it hasn't hit me yet. Intellectually, I feel like it's the right time for me to be stopping."

During her 12 years with Smuin, Fushille-Burke said a major challenge was that she never knew what to expect when approaching a new ballet.

"Michael's work is different from most choreographers because he has such a varied background," she said. "When you have a classical choreographer that's only done that, it's going to shape the choreography in a certain direction. But Michael has such a broad wealth of styles."

As for Smuin, he says he doesn't seek a consistent style in his work; nor does he think about an audience when creating a new piece.

"If I can please myself, I think I can please an audience, because I'm a very tough audience," he said. ■ 1951 opera.

'Rake's Progress' updated in West Bay Opera staging

By Mort Levine

Is the road to Hell just as slippery a slope in the 1970s as it was 200 years earlier? Indeed it is, West Bay Opera's current production of Igor Stravinsky's only opera tells us in this fable of a young man's get-rich-quick life in the fast lane.

"The Rake's Progress" (ever downward) is a satisfying work that has stood the test of time since its 1951 premiere under the composer's baton in Venice.

The original opera is the pure invention of some world-class talents: Stravinsky, now acknowledged as one of the greatest composers of the 20th century, joined forces with poet W. H. Auden and Chester Kallman, whose libretto was spun from an acid tale told in eight cartoons by 18th century London satirist William Hogarth.

West Bay's creative team decided that there is just as much validity to the tale in 1970s London's scenes of excess and venality. Director Jonathon Field found lots of parallels to human nature then and now. His vision is brought to life by a cast of talented young singers and a strongly supportive orchestral contingent led by WBO's music director Mary Chun.

Maestra Chun gave the score just enough of an off-beat contemporary musical flavor, making the Mozart-like overtones just a bit discordant and atonal. The music also gave some strange reshaping to the poetry. There was, however, no disguising the simple parable that gaining an unearned and undeserved fortune can lead to ruin, madness and death. At least in opera.

Making successful debuts at West Bay are Rhoslyn Jones, with a big, buttery soprano voice, and tenor Gerald Seminatore, whose English accents must have been honed in his apprentice years at Glyndebourne and Aldeborough. He has a crystalline high range, especially in the second and third acts.

Ms. Jones portrayed Anne Trulove, the trusting, faithful girl left behind in the country. Mr. Seminatore's Tom Rakewell also starts out as a bit of a naive country bumpkin. He dreams of getting rich without the nuisance of a steady job, which bothers Anne's father, performed by veteran baritone Douglas Nagel as the rustic English copy of the farmer in Grant Wood's "American Gothic."

Along comes Nick Shadow, the devil's henchman, sung elegantly by Kirk Eichelberger in a powerful bass-baritone. Shadow makes himself Rakewell's guide to fortune and debauchery as his unpaid servant for a year and a day. It's a bow to Gounod's "Faust" and "Mephistopheles," as well as Mozart's "Don Giovanni" and "Leporello." Doom comes on apace.

The action then moves to a London brothel as Mother Goose, performed by Ariela Morgenstern looking like the star of the bordello rather than its madam, introduces Tom to pleasures of the flesh. Here the WBO team comes up with a staging gimmick. After the lovers are tucked in bed, the scene reverts to the country again and the virginal bed of the faithful Anne, who vows to rescue her man.

A bored and rich Tom is then convinced to marry a dazzling freak show personality called Baba the Turk. As played by mezzo Carla Lopez-Speziale, Baba is a haughty and wealthy celebrity who browbeats the bewildered Tom.

In other productions, Baba turns out to be the circus bearded lady. She seems to have only half of a small moustache in this one. Tom's gambling addiction brings financial ruin and all of the palatial possessions go under the hammer of Sellem, the auctioneer, a role over-played by WBO veteran Michael Mendelsohn.

Overall, "The Rake's Progress" is an intriguing work to experience. It is hard to inject the kind of pathos and emotional empathy one might expect in such a tale. Nonetheless, it is well worth the three-plus hours invested by the audience. ■

Empire University of Japan in the late 1930s, he continued painting in his spare time. He then returned to China, where he studied under other well-known Chinese painters.

In 1947, he began painting professionally, and he moved to California in 1956 to begin teaching Chinese ink painting.

It's an art form that can inspire decades of study, Hau says.

"Some students follow me to study almost 30 years. Some are new students. I teach new students basic brush strokes, how to use the colors; the older students, they study deeper," he said. "To study Chinese painting it's not one year, two years and say 'I'm finished,' no. They could be three years, 10 years, like me, whole life, still study."

NORBERT VON DER GROEBEN

When he was a young artist, Hau's art teacher taught him basic technique, but told him not to develop his own style.

"After that I always wanted to do something different," Hau said. "Now I teach basic technique, brush strokes, but I talk to my students and say don't follow me, you do your own style. Develop your own spirit, your own technique."

Besides painting, Hau has published three novels, a history of sociology and a text on the principles of Chinese art. He founded The American Society for the Advancement of Chinese Arts to promote Chinese arts and culture with exhibits and travel, and he is an honorary professor at the TianJin Academy of Fine Arts in China.

Hau lives with his wife in his Los Altos home and studio, a home tucked between carefully landscaped, verdant gardens of bamboo and apricot trees.

Recently, the HouBeiRen Art Museum honored Hau's 90th birthday by publishing a limited-edition book. The tome is heavy and filled with information, with its glossy pages displaying images from the museum opening and of the six mayors and other Chinese political figures who attended the opening celebrations. There are also dozens of pages of color prints of Hau's paintings. A few precious copies of the book circled the room at a recent Pacific Art League class.

In one year since its opening, the museum has received more than 30,000 visitors, records state. Hau is most pleased with the young visitors who tour his museum, who see the different techniques possible within the Chinese brush painting art form. ■

JOB OPENINGS: F/T REPORTERS

The award-winning Palo Alto Weekly is seeking two talented, experienced journalists to cover the main "Palo Alto city beat" in one of the most dynamic cities in the Bay Area, nationally known for a history rich in innovation: (1) The land use/neighborhood reporter will be expected to write about breaking news as well as trends in developments, neighborhood quality-of-life issues, economics, City Hall activities and more. (2) The general news city/community reporter will cover other aspects of city government, community services, a large municipal utilities department and community news. There is considerable overlap and backup support necessary between the two reporters, requiring teamwork and flexibility. Both contribute to daily online news postings for the Weekly's community Web site. Attendance at some night meetings required.

Staff writers are responsible for developing several stories a week, in addition to an in-depth piece every six weeks on an issue pertaining to aspects of the city/community beat. Candidates should have at least two years of beat coverage experience, preferably in city government and community coverage. Strong writing and grammatical skills are essential.

Qualified candidates should submit a cover letter, resume and three clips to Managing Editor Marc Burkhardt, Palo Alto Weekly, 703 High St., Palo Alto, CA 94302 or e-mail mburkhardt@paweb.com.

About the Palo Alto Weekly: Founded in 1979, the 43,000-circulation newspaper publishes on Wednesdays and Fridays, with the Friday issue focusing on weekend and arts & entertainment activities. The newspaper specializes in articles that are analytical and insightful in addition to breaking news, features and other articles. In 1994, it became the first newspaper in the nation to publish all its articles directly on the Internet. In the past six years, the Weekly has won three first-place and two second-place awards for General Excellence among all large non-dailies in the statewide California Newspaper Publishers Association competition. It is one of the last independent, locally owned newspapers in the Bay Area.

A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by: ROBERT D. CECIL, Public Administrator in the Superior Court of California, County of SANTA CLARA.

THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that ROBERT D. CECIL, Public Administrator be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the deceased, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within four months from the date of first issuance of letters as provided in section 9100 of the California Probate Code. The time for filing claims will not expire before four months from the hearing date noticed above.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.
