Author Ann Davidson stands among the manzanita trees in front of her Palo Alto home. Her book "A Curious Kind of Widow: Loving a Man with Advanced Alzheimer's" tells the story of the last 12 years of her husband's life, and the way the disease affected their relationship.

'A curious kind of widow'

WIFE CHARTS THE RAVAGES OF HER HUSBAND'S ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE

By Diana Reynolds Roome

Watching the personality and intelligence of her husband fade away over 12 long years under the relentless assault of Alzheimer's disease, Ann Davidson kept meticulous notes about what was happening to both of them.

Published this year — the 100th anniversary of Dr. Alzheimer's labeling of the syndrome — "A Curious Kind of Widow: Loving a Man with Advanced Alzheimer's" is the second book to come out of the Davidsons' long and painful struggle.

Her first book, "Alzheimer's, a Love Story," tells of the diagnosis at only 59 and the slow decline of Dr. Julian Davidson, a Stanford professor of physiology who, ironically, specialized in the neurobiology of the brain. He had been physically strong, and would jog daily and cycle to work on campus until he started losing his way.

"This was the most shattering thing that had ever happened to Julian and me. ... It blew our lives apart," said Davidson, who has volunteered as a family consultant for the Alzheimer's Association in Mountain View for the past four years. "It's a very dark, grim story."

Yet she has portrayed a vibrant sense of their life together — including struggles with her own exhaustion, impatience and despair — that makes the book constantly engaging in spite of the sadness. The book's unflinching honesty gives readers the raw details of mental decline without

Too many are blind to good eye care

By Dr. Yichieh Shiuey

First, I have a question for you: When was the last time you had an eye exam?

If you can't remember, you are among the more than half of American adults who haven't received a dilated eye exam. Adults should have their eyes examined at least every two years because it is the best way to detect potentially sight-stealing problems such as cataracts, glaucoma, and macular degeneration.

Yichieh Shiuey

Q: Can "drug store" reading glasses damage your vision?

A: When they reach their forties, people who have never had a vision problem before find themselves holding their newspaper farther away or straining to see their computer screen. Ready-made reading glasses have become increasingly popular because they are less expensive than custom eye wear, so people could own several pairs to have around the house, car and office.

A distinct drawback to purchasing "drug store" reading glasses is that they are "one-size-fits-all" vision modification; the prescription is the same in both lenses. Most people do not have exactly the same prescription need in both eyes. Another common problem is that they may not be properly aligned with the eyes. Wearing glasses that aren't created specifically for your eyes can cause headaches, eyestrain, and even nausea. If you're experiencing these problems, visit your eye doctor for a reading glasses prescription.

Q: How does LASIK work?

A: The goal of LASIK is to correct nearsightedness, farsightedness, astigmatism or a combination of these. The LASIK procedure essentially puts the power of your eyeglasses or contacts in your eye. The laser sculpts the front surface of the eye, the cornea, to a shape which allows rays of light to properly focus inside of the eye.

The result is a decrease or elimination of the need for glasses or contact lenses. With only a few anesthetic drops in the eye, most people are very comfortable with the procedure, which usually takes less than 20 minutes for both eyes. Typically, patients have vision that allows them to drive legally by the next day. Using the latest laser vision correction method with the Visx CustomVue system and iris registration, nearly all patients achieve 20/20 or better vision.

Not everyone is a good candidate for LASIK, so be sure that a cornea and laser vision correction specialist examines you before undergoing the procedure. There are some innovative alternatives available to people who are not good candidates for LASIK because of either a high prescription or thin corneas. One is the Staar Visian intraocular lens, an implant which has been used worldwide for over 10 years and which has recently been approved by the FDA for the treatment of nearsightedness.

Q: What are cataracts and are they curable?

A: A cataract is a clouding of the eye's lens, which focuses light and produces clear images. This lens is in a sealed casing so as old cells die, they collect and become trapped within the casing, causing blurring of your vision.

There is no one cause of cataracts, though aging is the most typical. Ultraviolet light is associated with cataract development, so eye doctors recommend wearing UV-safe sunglasses and a wide-brimmed hat to reduce exposure. Diabetics are at increased risk for developing cataracts, as are users of steroids and diuretics. Eye injuries, certain medications, eating too much salt, smoking and heavy alcohol consumption also amplify your risk.

When cataracts have progressed enough to seriously impair vision and affect daily life, surgery is a very good option. Cataract surgery is a simple, relatively painless procedure to regain vision. Nine out of 10 people who have cataract surgery regain very good vision, somewhere between 20/20 and 20/40.

A new type of cataract surgery involves having the Crystalens intraocular lens implanted in both eyes. Some people without medically significant cataracts also choose Crystalens in order to decrease their dependence on glasses. Because the premium intraocular lenses are not covered by medical insurance, there is an out-of-pocket expense for this procedure. ■ and removed from life; they know they can't participate but they still need friendship, someone to indicate that they're happy to see them."

Responses were provided by Yichieh Shiuey, M.D., chairman of Ophthalmology at Camino Medical Group and a specialist in cornea, laser vision correction and cataract surgery.

The caregiver, too, especially when part of the patient's family, is desperate for companionship and acknowledgment of what they're going through — a kind of compassion that Davidson calls "the freeing space of acceptance."

"Many are sympathetic but they don't know how to express it," said Davidson, who advises, "Don't avoid the word [Alzheimer's] and live with an elephant in the room."

When people offer a kind word and even practical help, it can make a big difference.

At one point in the book, Davidson phones the Green Library at Stanford, where her husband had a study for many years, and somebody there asks after him in a way that seems especially caring. "No matter how awkward the moment," she writes, "when problems are acknowledged instead of ignored, comfort comes."

As a volunteer for the Alzheimer's Association, Davidson often talks to people who have just received a diagnosis.

■ INFORMATION

"A Curious Kind of Widow: Loving a Man with Advanced Alzheimer's" by Ann Davidson, 2006, (Fithian Press)

"They are stunned and don't have a clue what to do next," she said. "But people need to know they don't have to go through it alone. We have great resources in this area — we're very lucky."

The Alzheimer's Association, for example, runs early stage support groups for people with a recent diagnosis, as well as information and support groups for family members and even an online shop. Available help runs the gamut from advice on legal, financial and other practical issues, to painting classes for Alzheimer's patients.

Davidson's portrait of the final stage of a long and vital marriage amounts to a courageous act of sharing. In "A Curious Kind of Widow," she offers hope of salvaging life and love from the tides of forgetting. ■
