WOMAN'S LOVE AFFAIR WITH ROSES TURNS INTO A BOOK

By Barbara Wood

Fooling around in her garden one day, avid gardener, author, photographer and garden designer Carolyn Parker was inspired to twine the leaves and flowers of one her favorite roses into the letter R.

The effect was so charming the Lafayette resident and former fashion designer tried another letter with another rose and soon was determined to create an entire alphabet made from roses whose names begin with that letter.

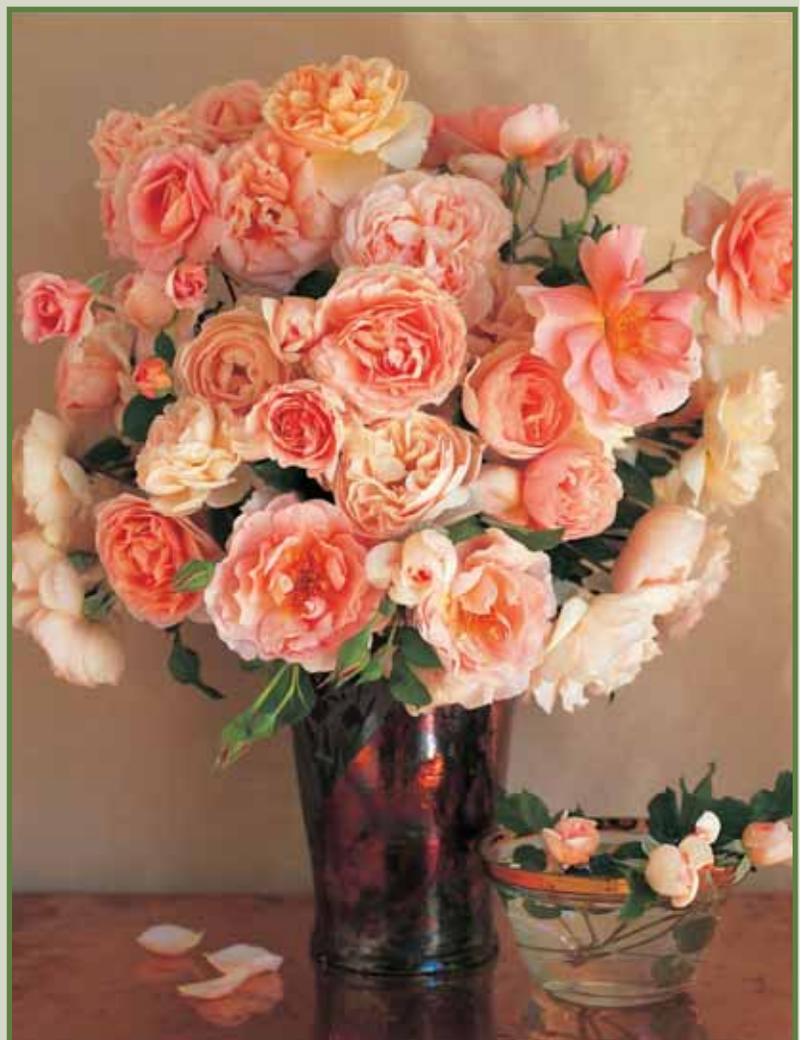

The result is a charming and informative large-format book, "R is for Rose: Reflections from a Passionate Rose Lover."

To celebrate and promote her book, Parker gave a signing at Filoli on July 20. The event is just one event in Filoli's "Flowers in the Home" celebration going on through this Saturday.

While the book is arranged around Parker's rose alphabet, it also features hundreds of full-color photos of roses, photographed both in garden settings and in arrangements. It contains a wealth of information about all aspects of roses and rose cultivation, from their history to sources for finding unusual roses. A section at the end of the book is a complete mini-course on flower arranging in only 16 pages.

Parker is a true rose aficionado. She crams 250 rose bushes into her one-third-acre corner lot, where she has been gardening since 1984. Her photos of her roses led to her first book, "The Poetry of Roses," in 1995.

By the end of "R is for Rose," the reader will not only know roses, but will also know Parker through her first-person recollections about her love affair with roses.

Each chapter, headed by the rose and the letter it forms, delves into an aspect of rose history or cultivation. The letter G, for example, features Graham Thomas. The prolific yellow climber was developed by David Austin and named after the man who many believe began the rediscovery of old roses that brought fragrance back into rose gardens. Parker not only tells the history of that rose, but recollects her visit with Graham Stuart Thomas in his garden in England not long before his death in 2003.

The letter R features Rouletii, the magenta/pink climber that originally inspired the rose alphabet idea. Parker tells how she found the rose at an old

Healthy paints

MILK-BASED WALL COVERINGS SPARE HOMEOWNERS THE NASTY ODOR

Q: I need to paint the interior of my house but I dread the horrible paint smell. I've also heard that the fumes are unhealthy. Are there alternatives?

— Diana in Palo Alto

A: Diana, I take it you don't sniff glue either. Most paints, like glues, contain Volatile Organic Compounds that are released over time as the paint cures. VOCs are strongest in the weeks after painting but actually continue to pollute indoor air for years. Reducing your family's exposure to these brain- and lung-damaging chemicals is easier than most people think.

Many companies are producing low- or no-VOC paints. Kelly Moore produces a line of paint called Enviro-Coat and Sherman Williams a similar product line called Harmony, both readily available locally.

Another interesting option is paints made from the protein in milk. The Old Fashioned Milk Paint Company (www.milkpaint.com) produces a beautiful line of colors that are both rich and oh so au courant. The paint has an old world velvety feel that is just lovely.

Strange as it seems, it comes in powder form, which is then mixed with water to create the paint. One advantage to this is you only mix up as much paint as you need, so there is no waste. Unused traditional paints are hazardous waste, which require special disposal. Liquid paints also do not store well, typically becoming moldy and unusable within a year. Powdered paint has none of these problems.

I spoke with Anne Thibeau, the company founder's daughter. She informed me that milk paints were found in King Tut's tomb and were in common use until about World War II, when newfangled VOC paints wiped them out. Her father, Charles, resurrected the milk paint formula though extensive research and testing 30-odd years ago. It's interesting how things come full circle.

No-VOC paints create a healthier indoor environment and reduce hazardous waste. What's not to like?

Q: My girlfriend told me she was going to be plastering the interior walls of her new house. I thought plaster stopped being used ages ago. Am I missing the boat?

— Janet in San Jose

A: Let's just say that you have a ticket for a later departure. Plaster is the hip new product in interior wall finishing. Wait a minute, you may say. Didn't plaster go out of fashion in the 1940s? Don't old Victorian era houses have problems with cracking plaster? Yes indeed, it's all true. But there are some compelling reasons plaster is making a comeback.

First of all, plaster is now used over lath board substrate, which dramatically reduces the weight of the plaster and therefore its tendency to crack. The new installation method also reduces labor costs.

The best thing about plaster, though, is the look and feel. People have grown tired of the tacky textures common in the cheap post-war housing many of us grew up in. Many people today enjoy wall textures that have the "old world," smooth qualities more easily attainable in plaster.

These textures can be done in sheet-rock finishes, but tape lines and other imperfections often produce an unsatisfactory look and feel. Plaster finishes tend to make the wall look substantial, and the imperfections add to its character. The walls are also hard and cool so they feel good to the touch. The additional density of the material also provides sound dampening and modulates temperature changes.

Plasters can be mixed with pigment to create an integrated color throughout the application. The depth of color and subtle variations look rich and inspiring. Another benefit of integrated color plasters is that wear, nicks and scratches do not leave ugly lines exposing the wall beneath, so there is virtually no need for touch-ups or repainting.

Integrated color also does not release VOCs, so it is environmentally safe. Earth plasters are particularly beautiful and environmentally healthy. Earth plasters are made primarily from clays mixed with non-toxic ochre and oxide pigments. One of my favorite manufacturers is American Clay (www.americanclay.com). Their products do not harm indoor air quality and are sustainably produced and recycled. They also come in a terrific assortment of colors. ■

Second Annual
"CITY OF LIGHTS" Exhibit
 By Bryan Mark Taylor

August 19 – September 18, 2006
 Artist Reception, August 19th, 5 – 8 pm

The impressionistic collection of new original works in oil will be unveiled on August 19 at the artist's reception hosted by Galleria Luna Fine Art from 5 to 8 pm. Rendered at different times of the day, lavender and violet foggy days and warm sienna and shades-of-red rainy nights of the city are but a small sample of Taylor's brilliant expression of city light reflections. The viewer will be dazzled by the romance of the city lights whether from a warm glow of light from lampposts, head and tail lights or market windows.

Please HELP in funding the placement of a local teen in an alternative academic program/school and ensure his success and reintegration into our community. Intense intervention programs for troubled teens experiencing emotional, academic, and/or behavioral problems can make all the difference in preventing their engagement in the legal system causing further challenges, not only for the teen but also their family. Therapeutic schools/programs are expensive and often impossible for parents to afford. Please help change the life of a local teen by sending your gift, in any denomination, to Teen Crisis Outreach - Cora Haussecker 1221 Middlefield Road, Palo Alto, CA 94301. THANK YOU!
