Diligence is the key

AS THE NUMBER OF BREAST CANCER CASES GROWS, SO DOES THE SUPPORT NETWORK TRYING TO STOP THE DISEASE

By Alexa Tondreau

When she was a medical resident some 20 years ago, physician Cindy Russell was told by a supervisor to make sure to observe a young woman in the hospital who had been diagnosed with breast cancer.

"We were told it was something you won't often see," Russell says, explaining that breast cancer patients were normally in their 60s, 70s and 80s.

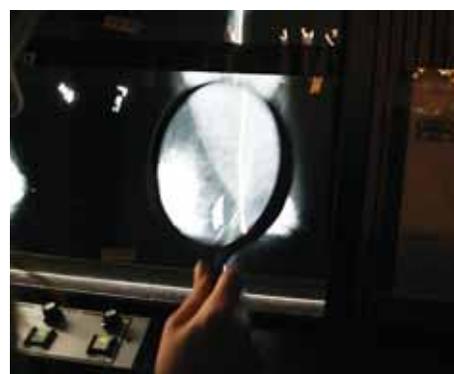

Russell, a plastic surgeon in Mountain View who routinely does breast reconstruction surgery for cancer survivors, says, "Now, I commonly see women come in who are in their 30s and 40s."

Russell's experience reflects the changing landscape of breast cancer in America, from younger women, and more of them, being diagnosed, to advancements in treatment options and the increasing survivorship of breast cancer patients, who are banding together to make the public more aware of the risk.

As the most common cancer among women, with one in eight women likely to develop it in their lifetime, the movement to shed light on the disease reaches its pinnacle in October, which is Breast Cancer Awareness Month here and across the nation.

And while the Northern California Cancer Center reports that there has been a decline in breast cancer diagnoses and deaths since 2000 in this region, the fact remains that the rate of invasive breast cancer in Northern California is 9 percent higher than the rest of California, with the disease comprising 30 percent of all new cancer diagnoses.

Local activities to curtail this trend are numerous, and in many ways they center on the most important preventive tools women can use against breast cancer — regular self-exams and yearly mammograms.

Paula Reed, director of oncology at the Camino Medical Group, says it's essential for women "to get a yearly mammogram, and do monthly self-exams. The biggest thing for women to do is know their own breasts."

A mammogram is an X-ray exam of the breasts, used to detect changes or abnormalities. Because breast cancer can take years to develop, if it is detected at its earliest stage, the five-year survival rate is 98 percent.

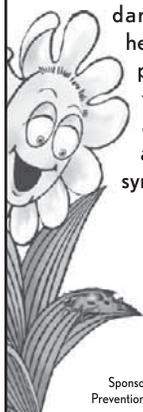

But mammograms can be expensive, costing upwards of $200. For this reason, El Camino Hospital is offering low-cost mammograms this month to women who are underserved or uninsured.

The all-inclusive screenings will take place at the hospital's Breast Screening Center, one of the largest in Northern California, and patients will need a physician or clinic referral to qualify. The hospital encourages patients who do not have an established health care provider to visit the Rota-Care Clinic, which is across the street from the hospital on Grant Road, and where they can obtain

Breast cancer awareness begins at home

By Dr. Edmund Tai

Q: If I get regular mammograms that show that my breasts are healthy, why should I do monthly self-exams?

A: Good for you for getting mammograms! An estimated 13 million U.S. women have never had a mammogram. Mammograms are among the best early detection methods. If detected early, the five-year survival rate exceeds 95 percent. Women in their 40s and older should have a mammogram every one to two years (discuss how often to get the test with your physician).

Breast self exams (BSEs) should be done every month because changes can happen quickly. BSEs can lead to early detection of masses, which improves outcome in terms of types and viability of cures and greater survival rates. The more consistently you examine your breasts, the more you will be familiar with them, making it easier to tell if something atypical occurs. (One oft-used simile is that normal lumps feel like oatmeal, and an abnormal lump feels like a pea.) If anything changes or seems to get worse over time, talk to your doctor.

Q: Is thermography effective for the early detection of breast cancer?

A: There is no evidence that breast thermography (infrared imaging) is an effective tool for early detection of breast cancer. It is not considered a valid screening tool, nor is it effective for tracking the disease. It has not proven itself in clinical trials and is not accepted by the oncology community. Its appeal to patients is that it is less uncomfortable, but it should not be considered a viable alternative to a mammogram. There are too many false positives and the images are not precise enough to allow for biopsy. I strongly discourage its use.

Q: What are the newest chemotherapy treatments?

A: There are two major groups of chemotherapy drugs being used as "targeted therapy." This is a new concept in cancer therapy; proteins are identified in cancer cells that are overproduced in comparison to normal cells, and hence can be "targeted" as potential points of attack by drugs or antibodies.

Herceptin and Avastin (anti-angiogenesis) are examples of such drugs. They are now used routinely with great impact. More breakthroughs along these lines are forthcoming.

Chemotherapy drugs themselves are much better tolerated due to improved schedules and dose modifications. Supportive drugs, which control nausea and other side effects, are very effective. The majority — 75 percent — of cancer patients who were working before their diagnosis can work during chemo with some adjustment to their schedule. Their quality of life is quite good; the foremost issue remains the emotional response to the disease.

Q: What are the risks of hormone replacement therapy?

A: Hormone replacement therapy (HRT) is a combination of estrogen and progestin, developed as therapy for emotional, physical and health-risk symptoms related to menopause. HRT was assumed to be a good thing until the Prempro trial, which showed within the first two years a 25 percent increase in breast cancer, a 29 percent increase in cardiovascular disease, and a 41 percent increase in strokes among women on this HRT. This led to discontinuation of the trial and a change in the standard of practice.

It is a fact that increased estrogen exposure is a strong risk factor in the development of breast cancer in post-menopausal women. It is now the standard recommendation that HRT use be limited to those women with significant post-menopausal symptoms, that its use is limited in duration (two to four years), and that estrogen alone be prescribed without concurrent progesterone. ■

The hidden factors

OUR WELL BEING CAN BE UNDERMINED
BY ALLERGIES, OTHER PROBLEMS

By Flavia Kreis

These days, people of all ages are increasingly suffering from such problems as depression, anxiety, insomnia, bloating and weight gain. These problems can have a number of causes, not all of which are obvious. In this column I try to address a few of them.

Flavia Kreis

Trouble in the endocrine system is one cause. This system of glands is like an orchestra; when an individual gland is unbalanced the rest of them cannot be in harmony. Oftentimes, due to our environment of toxins, artificial hormones, antibiotics and pesticides containing heavy metals, our endocrine system stops functioning optimally, causing adrenal exhaustion (can't sleep or wind down) and the symptoms mentioned above.

Another cause is food allergies and sensitivities. When we think of allergies, most of us picture sneezing, watering eyes, stomachache — but in fact it can manifest itself in many different ways, and can occur long after the time of exposure to the allergen. This is why most allergies and sensitivities go undetected by conventional tests.

The many manifestations of allergies vary from person to person, and include headache, fatigue, lack of concentration, bloating, weight gain or loss (sometimes three pounds or more from one day to the next), hot flashes and skin problems, to name a few.

In children, the manifestations can include restless behavior, irritability, bedwetting, inability to fall asleep easily, infections (especially of the ear, nose or throat) and asthma.

Keep in mind that the physical health of your body can trigger or reduce the manifestation of an allergy; the healthier we are, the faster our immune system responds to any form of invasion, whether it is from food or some other source. Our immune system responds better to attacks when we are rested, well-fed (organic foods), have some form of spiritual outlet, take necessary supplements and exercise.

We get a constant bombardment every day from chemicals. When our body is fed by nutrient-depleted foods which are also GMO-altered — by radiated meats, antibiotics, synthetic hormones, pesticides and chemical preservatives — what do you think is going to happen inside? Nothing good, obviously. But most of us are in denial about this.

The reason we're in denial boils down to habits: They're hard to break. The truth is, many people are averse to change. But others are willing to invest the time and money in a better quality of life, including better quality food, and are healthier for it. After all, we cannot change parts of our body like we do with cars.

Either we take personal responsibility and educate ourselves, or we rely completely on the promotion and advertising of for-profit companies and accept what they and others tell us is good food for us. ■

INTERPLAST HOLDS MV CONFERENCE

Interplast, a Mountain View-based organization that provides free reconstructive surgery for children with clefts, disabling burns and hand injuries, usually travels to developing countries to perform its good deeds. But this week the group is bringing the developing countries to Mountain View.

Starting Wednesday, Oct. 11 through Sunday, Oct. 15, more than 30 surgeons and physicians from 16 developing countries will be in Mountain View to participate in the International Partnership Conference. The conference is designed to improve medical access and care for children living in poverty-stricken lands.

Attendees include medical experts from the U.S., providing educational forums and seminars. Interplast is using the event to help foster cultural understanding around the world, and hopes this conference will allow doctors from different areas of the world to teach and learn from one another.

a breast screening referral.

Meanwhile, the Camino Medical Group (CMG), based in part in Mountain View, is passing out 5,000 breast exam packets this month, which will include a shower card with instructions for a self-breast exam and a calendar with a mammogram reminder — all packaged in a pink change purse, as pink is the cause's official color.

CMG will pass out 2,000 purses to community clinics, and the other 3,000 will go to 19 Curves health clubs in the area. Curves, which is the first fitness and weight loss facility exclusively for women, told CMG last year that the purses had a noticeable impact.

"At one location in San Jose," CMG spokesperson Jill Meyer said, "15 women reported that they had gone in for their mammogram."

Mountain View's business community is honoring Breast Cancer Awareness Month as well. Peninsula Beauty Supply, which has a location in Mountain View, will donate 50 cents of every beauty product purchased in October to the Community Breast Health Project, a nonprofit group in Palo Alto.

Working in an industry targeted to females inspired the company to lend its support.

"We think that beauty and health go hand in hand," said Annette Pape, Peninsula Beauty's director of sales and marketing. "It's important to generate awareness among our customers, staff and vendors."

Additionally, an online stationery company in Mountain View, OlioStyle, will donate 50 percent of the proceeds from its boxed sets to breast cancer research. Explained OlioStyle owner Peggy Tsai, "To me, not only is awareness important, but so is the support network for those affected."

She added, "There are many types of diseases out there, and you hear about them all the time. But it doesn't really hit you until it hits you — and someone close is affected by it." ■
