LOCAL LANDSCAPERS PRESENT ANNUAL MOONLIGHT POND TOUR
— AND A CHANCE TO HELP FIGHT CANCER

By Amber Cleave

When they first started their “Moonlight Pond Tour” four years ago, Chris and Shanna Schriener of Mountain View knew they were doing it for a charitable cause. But they never dreamt that the charity would become so personal.

Today, the Schriners — owners of a two-part company here, Brookside Garden and The Pond Shack — hold the tour in honor of their son, Michael, who has successfully fought an intense battle with cancer.

Michael was diagnosed with leiomyosarcoma, an extremely rare type of cancer, in May 2005. Although it’s now in remission, all succeeding Moonlight Pond Tours (including the 15-home tour coming up next week, Oct. 27 and 28) are fundraisers for the Amschwand Sarcoma Foundation, which promotes cancer research, education and support for families battling cancer. Last year, the self-guided tour raised $1,500 for the foundation; this year they hope to at least match that amount.

That’s a double benefit, especially for local homeowners looking to remodel their outdoor space with a garden pond. The tour’s featured ponds, which vary in size and price, each highlight what Shanna Schriener calls the five most important elements to a successful pond: rocks and gravel, filtration, waterfalls, plants and fish. Schriener says that the ponds on the tour are all unique, but exhibit all or most of the five elements.

Schriener also said that customers, after installing a pond, tell her they use their backyard more and enjoy being out there in the evenings.

“When it comes to ponds, I always tell people, ‘You won’t watch the grass grow but you will watch the water flow,’” Schriener said.

In addition to The Pond Shack itself, the tour visits 15 houses in the area, including two in Mountain View. Other houses on the tour are located in Campbell, Los Altos, Los Altos Hills, San Jose, Los Gatos and Milpitas.

The Pond Shack also sells a map book to help plan out a viewing route. The tickets and map can be purchased at the business or online at www.thepondshack.com.

Easy way to save energy: Go tankless

By Anabel Lee

Over time, plumbing fixtures eventually give out. Besides being spiffy and new, today's replacements often use less water and energy to maintain. Among the fixtures that have grown increasingly popular over the past five years are tankless water heaters.

"Everyone is very energy conscious, and the initial money out is not the object. Their object is to save energy and to be more conservation aware," said Mark Billings, owner of Trade-mark Plumbing, Santa Clara. In the last three years alone, he has seen a 10 to 20 percent increase in the requests for tankless water heaters from his clients.

A tankless water heater is a high-BTU water heater that heats incoming water as fast as it comes in and goes out. Billings said that it "fires the burner on demand, so it saves fuel because you are not heating stagnant water.

"The biggest thing that everyone likes is that they don't heat water you're not using." This particular feature often makes tankless water heaters appealing to individuals who travel frequently.

In addition to conserving energy, the demand for tankless water heaters has grown due to how small and compact they are. For some time, this space-saving aspect has made tankless heaters popular in many European countries where living spaces tend to be tighter.

It is also one reason why Lisa Jung had Billings install two units after they expanded their residence three years ago.

"I like the space that we've kind of earned from not having a big huge water heater," said Jung. Both tankless water heaters are attached to the outside of the house. "We were also thinking of energy consumption."

Jung especially likes going outside and setting the temperature to her liking with a dial. She said that this ability to control water temperature in a very precise fashion is good for families with infants because it eliminates the need for touch tests when preparing baths for such small children.

Jung warned that those interested in installing tankless water heaters should know that the filters must be cleaned after a year and a half or so of use in order to avoid cold spots.

"I think sometimes people are afraid to try new things," Jung added. "People are kind of creatures of habit. I'm glad we did it. I think it's efficient, and it works. With a tankless, it doesn't leak because water doesn't sit in it."

Monie Wheatcroft TenBroeck also had a tankless water heater installed in her Palo Alto home this past September for both space and energy efficiency considerations. "The thought of not having to keep water hot all the time we thought was a good thing," she said.

A key benefit of having a tankless water heater is that "you never run out of hot water, which has been awesome," she added, noting that this attribute comes in handy when doing sinkloads of dishes.

However, she has experienced more noise from the tankless water heater than she expected. "Every time it fires up it does make a noise, like turning up an oven. So putting it away from living areas is a good thing if you're sensitive to sound."

Although the heater is located on the outside of her house, she can still hear it from the inside and has tried to minimize the noise and vibration with rubber washers. She advises people to put the heaters in the attic.

During the first week after having their tankless water heater set up, TenBroeck and her husband Steve smelled a bit of a gas odor, but that has since faded.

Since making the switch to tankless water heaters, Jung and TenBroeck have seen reductions in their gas and electric bills. "The old heater was as big as a Volkswagen bus. It took a lot of energy," Jung said.

While tankless water heaters cost on average about $1,500, and a standard 75-gallon water heaters costs between $750 and $800, the money homeowners save in terms of energy costs pays for the tankless water heater in about four years' time, according to Billings: "Over the long run, it does save on electric and gas bills." ■

WATER HEATERS HAVE COME A LONG WAY, WITH ON-DEMAND HEAT AN EFFICIENT ALTERNATIVE

By Forrest Linebarger

Hot water heaters are not sexy. They are primitive, hulking creatures. They heat 40-75 gallons of water 24 hours a day, seven days a week. We use them briefly in the morning or evening to take showers or wash our clothes — the rest of the time they heat water that nobody is using.

This inefficiency is evident in the numbers: Water heaters make up between 14 and 25 percent of our household energy bill. When they are located in the house, they also heat our house all day long — meaning that, in the summer, we pay to heat the water, which heats the house, then we pay to cool the house.

But there is a revolution afoot in water heating. On-demand, or “tankless,” water heaters have taken the market by storm. They are, well, a little sexy. They work by only heating water when you turn on the hot water faucet. They heat water rapidly as it passes through a highly efficient burner. They never run out of hot water. That’s right, invite the whole extended family to stay at Christmas and no one will get a cold shower.

When they first came to the American market, they were underpowered by American standards. They had been used for years in Europe, but Europeans apparently liked wimpy showers. Now they have enough capacity to run two or more showers simultaneously, while saving 50 percent on energy costs. They also used to be expensive. Prices have dropped so low that you can now buy a quality tankless water heater for $500 to $700.

Another nice feature about tankless water heaters is they can open up floor space. The units are amazingly small, about the size of a computer box. They hang on an interior or exterior wall or placed in the attic. Many people with water heater closets have relocated their unit and converted the water heater area into storage. Their flexibility in location also means you can put the unit closer to your bathrooms, reducing the time you need to flush cold water down the drain.

Forrest Linebarger

Traditional tank water heaters, especially when located in the garage or near storage areas, are significant causes of household fires. On-demand water systems, however, do not typically have pilot lights, and they are usually located high above flammables.

Tankless water heaters also tend to outlast traditional tanks. Tank heaters might last 5 to 15 years, whereas most tankless units have a life of 15 to 20 years.

Tankless water heaters heat the water rapidly, so they may require upgrading the size of your flue pipe (if the unit is located indoors) or your gas line. A small price to pay for such a sexy appliance. ▀

Pond Shack itself, and for good reason. The Schriners' business — Brookside Garden is the installation division, and The Pond Shack carries supplies such as water lilies, goldfish and koi — is also used as a display center.

"We have been open for three years now, so The Pond Shack's plants are finally established and lush," Shanna Schriener said. "It's a perfect place to come for ideas and to discover the beauty of ponds."

The Pond Shack offers do-it-yourself classes, training people on proper installation and giving a sense of the commitment and effort involved. Often-times, Schriener said, people take the class and then hire Brookside to do the installation anyway. Most of the ponds on the tour were installed by Brookside Gardens, she said, though a few were installed by the homeowners.

The company is a family affair these days, as Michael works at The Pond Shack with his parents, helping in the fish department and educating customers in proper fish care.

“Michael was so wonderful throughout the whole thing,” Schriener said. “He has such a great sense of humor and never became depressed. He handled it much better than we did.”

The Moonlight Tour will be held next Friday and Saturday, Oct. 27-28, from 5-10 p.m. Tickets are $15, and are good for both

HOME BRIEF

Rents up 20 percent in Mountain View

Looking for an apartment and finding rents a bit higher than last year? You're not alone. According to RealFacts, a Novato-based research organization and database publisher specializing in the multifamily housing market, the hottest market for rental units is the San Jose-Sunnyvale-Santa Clara County area, which saw greater than 10 percent increases this past year.

That translates to $1,680 per month for a one-bedroom, one-bath apartment in Palo Alto (up 11.2 percent) or $2,218 (up 5.1 percent) for a two-bedroom, two-bath unit. In Mountain View that one-bedroom unit goes for $1,458 (up a whopping 21.7 percent) and the two-bedroom for $1,928 (up 18.2 percent).

Rents are going up at almost the same rate in the San Francisco-Oakland-Fremont area (which includes San Mateo County). In Menlo Park, a one-bedroom apartment goes for $1,829 (up 6.4 percent) and a two-bedroom for $2,556 (up 9.2 percent). In East Palo Alto, rents are $1,728 (up 10.7 percent) and $2,145 (up 7.5 percent).

RealFacts tracks rental and occupancy information for rental communities of 100 units or larger.

THE RUMORS ARE TRUE... Our Real Estate Market IS Changing!

No the sky is not falling nor is our Real Estate market! Homes do sell and often with Multiple Offers, but the big difference now is that homes not marketed correctly, priced right or shown to their best ability don't sell.

The cure: Work with top notch Brokers!

As of this Monday, October 16th the single family home market consisted of:
A total of 66 homes on the market 34 of which were NOT sold with an average of 33+ days on the market.

32 of which were in contract with an average of 28+ days on the market.

Homes listed by Chuck & Tori sold in an average of 12 days on the market for an average 11.43% over asking price!

The choice is clear... Chuck & Tori don't just list homes, we sell them!

"Elizabeth took our abused rental home of 35 years and turned it into a masterpiece in 10 days. Our ROI on the improvements she orchestrated were 3 fold, equally $80,000 in additional profit. Not only were we thrilled with her enthusiasm, professionalism and true concern with our needs. She is truly a great realtor."
