WOMEN WHO SUCCESSFULLY BATTLED BREAST CANCER TAKE TO THE RUNWAY IN FASHION EVENT

By Susan Hong

Breast cancer survivors won't wear bikinis at the Community Breast Health Project's fashion show. But the 30 models will take to the runway on March 17 to show off fitness and beach wear — and affirm their beauty and strength despite their cancer diagnoses.

The fashion show provides the models with an opportunity to celebrate conquering breast cancer alongside fellow-survivors, and to help build self esteem among others with the disease. This year's fundraiser, with the theme of "Fit for Life Goes to the Tropics," will be held at Hotel Sofitel San Francisco Bay in Redwood City.

One model hitting the runways is double-mastectomy survivor Lori Sinclair, who found out she had breast cancer in September, 1994 — just before her wedding.

"We had to cancel the wedding. It's like we announced [the breast cancer], and I was really uncomfortable with that. I couldn't make those phone calls, so my husband did," she said.

Thirteen years later, she and her husband have a son.

"I want to tell women that it's hard. It's not what you want, but there's another side to it. When you come through to the other side, you're even better than you were before — in many intrinsic ways," she said.

"I try to live it day by day. I don't sweat the small stuff. I try to do things that I want to do. Before that I was doing what I needed to do, I was a workaholic."

This year marks the second anniversary of the fashion show, which raised more than $200,000 in 2006 to provide support services to women who face breast cancer. Development coordina-brands will donate clothes for the show. Tiffany & Co. is donating five pieces of jewelry, and Diamonds of Palo Alto will donate one loose diamond, Messer said.

The models range in age from 27 to 80. The oldest among them, Juanita Brooks, discovered her breast cancer on her own even though her mammogram tests showed negative, she said. She had a double mastectomy in April 2005, followed by chemotherapy treatments.

For her, modeling in the fashion show is important for sending an informative and hopeful message.

"I will be extremely happy. Certainly women who have not had breast cancer will look at me in a positive way," she said.

She said she hopes the fashion show will also highlight the importance of breast exams and mammograms.

The TERRIBLE, HORRIBLE, NO GOOD, VERY BAD week

VICIOUS STOMACH ILLNESS PUT OUR YOUNG SON OUT OF COMMISSION FOR DAYS ON END

By Kathy Schrenk

As almost all parents of young children know, this winter has seen more cases of stomach flu than most. If your kid hasn't spent a day (or five) vomiting up just about everything he or she eats, consider yourself very lucky.

Our son had it in December and again in February. The most recent bout was especially excruciating for all involved.

And we weren't alone this flu season. According to El Camino Hospital spokesperson Judy Twitchell, last January was the busiest one for the emergency room in the hospital's history — a fact at least partly due to the spate of stomach illnesses.

If they all went through the same thing we did, my heart goes out to them. What follows is a day-by-day account of our poor son's tribulations.

Day 1

We wake up to find our 15-month-old has vomited in his crib during the night.

After a little while he seems hungry, so we put him in the highchair for applesauce and crackers. He seems fine, but barfs a couple minutes after the last bite. He had been acting normal but now seems lethargic. Uncharacteristically, he goes back to sleep around 11 a.m.

It seems we tried too soon to give him food, according to Dr. Ken Vereschagin, pediatrician at Camino Medical Group and former chief of staff at El Camino Hospital.

"I recommend small amounts — teaspoonfuls — of clear fluids — water, juice or broth — every 15 to 20 minutes on a trial basis," he said.

If the child keeps that down, try gradual increases, he said. "If not, then you gave too much — sorry, clean up the mess and try again in two to four hours or maybe tomorrow."

Our own pediatrician says most kids get through this in a day or so, and some even skip the diarrhea phase. That would be nice. Just try to keep him hydrated, she says — and if he doesn't wet his diaper at least every eight hours, we're supposed to take him to the emergency room.

Pushing liquids — water, broth, or Pedialyte, a kind of Gatorade for babies — is especially important if the child is in the diarrhea phase, Dr. Vereschagin says. And, of it probably had been in my body for years," she said. For Paula Power, 59, the fashion show means giving back to Community Breast Health Project for all the things the organization did for her. When she first found out she had breast cancer, she denied it. But Power realized she had to do something about it, and eventually turned to CBHP for support, she said.

"They meant so much in my life and they helped me get through an interesting period," she said. "The staff there, there's nothing they won't do for you. I was just lucky that we live in a community where we have these services."

In addition to a tropical-themed dinner, wine will be donated by Chatom and Marryvale, and champagne from Beltramo's. Sponsors include Atherton Lane Advisors, Comerica Bank, Merrill Lynch and Pacific Athletic Club. ■ course, parents should always call their own doctor if they have concerns about their child's health.

Fortunately for our boy, some liquids are getting digested, and a fever of 103 is quickly brought down with medication, so we're not too worried. But my heart breaks when I watch him struggle through a vomiting session — the poor little guy!

Day 2

He must be feeling better today, since it's a "24-hour flu," right? So we try to feed him some pureed vegetables. Big mistake.

Despite the common name of "stomach flu," this illness has nothing to do with the more serious flu against which young kids should be inoculated, said Dr. Stephen Harris, chairman of pediatrics at Santa Clara Valley Medical Center. What my child has is probably rotavirus, he said. This is usually not a serious illness, unless a young child gets too dehydrated.

Luckily for parents of very young babies, a vaccine to protect against rotavirus came out about a year ago, he said. Babies can get the oral vaccine at two, four and six months of age.

Day 3

A normally energetic child with an outgoing personality (his nickname is "Mischief Man"), our baby sits on the couch with a blank look on his face while Dad watches TV or plays video games. He doesn't even try to grab the remote. Our doc says he doesn't have to go to the emergency room because of this lethargy unless he's totally unresponsive, so we're glad to see a couple smiles when our dog runs into the room.

Today is the "diarrhea phase." He still isn't keeping any food down. Surely the end must be near.

Day 4

Our baby continues his couch potato ways, though a visit from Grandma and Grandpa makes his day. We haven't seen him smile like that since Wednesday! He continues to sleep much and keep down little — but it's more, at least, than yesterday. Frustratingly, he'll go 12 hours or so without vomiting, then throw up after we've fed him something that he successfully digested just a few hours ago.

We are really starting to miss the Mischief Man.

Day 5

I honestly don't know which is

This was clearly a case for Spinal Decompression, a method of reducing the pressure on the disc, reducing the bulge and allowing the nerves to heal.

The outcome? Ernie was able to return to his work with zero pain. He lifts and installs carpet, water skis, surfs, and feels

More than skin deep

NEWEST SCANNING TECHNOLOGY IS CUTTING EDGE, WITHOUT THE CUTTING

By Dr. Torben Kristensen

Q. How are scans, like MRIs, PETs and CATs, different?
A. Sometimes detecting a disease or growth is like looking for a needle in a haystack. These new X-ray or imaging technologies help doctors detect the needle quickly, so they can treat patients sooner. The images are so clear and detailed, they have nearly made exploratory surgery a thing of the past. Each scan uses computer-generated cross-sectional views and three-dimensional images of the internal organs and structures of the body.

Dr. Kristensen

The CT or CAT scan provides detailed information about the internal structure of the body. This test is often done to look for the cause of pain, or right before surgery to help plan the extent of an operation. Bones and other dense areas can also be accurately defined.

Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) is a powerful, painless, non-invasive diagnostic tool for the softer tissue in the body. These scans contribute vital information to clinical workups and for planning surgery.

Positron emission tomography (PET scan) is a diagnostic exam that involves administering a radioactive substance to a patient, then scanning and evaluating where the radioactive tracer accumulates. PET scans can be linked to CT scans and used to evaluate a variety of diseases. PET scans are used most often to detect cancer and to examine the effects of cancer therapy. They are also effective at diagnosing heart conditions, like coronary artery disease and myocardial infarction.

Q: What is "virtual" surgery?

A: The name "virtual" is a bit misleading. One great example that a lot of people can relate to is the virtual colonos-copy, the latest development in colon cancer detection. Unlike traditional colonoscopy, virtual colonoscopy is noninvasive and can be performed in mere minutes. Using sophisticated imaging techniques to generate a 3-D reconstruction of the inner surface of the colon, the doctor can find abnormalities during one procedure, making it less distressing and less expensive for patients.

Q: Has mammography accuracy improved?

A: The same way that digital technology made us all feel like expert photographers, digital breakthroughs have significantly enhanced medicinal diagnostics. Digital mammography is among the most promising new technologies for earlier detection of breast cancer.

From the patient's point of view, digital mammography feels the same; but it is faster, so a bit more comfortable. Because the mammography images are stored directly in a computer rather than on film, there is no waiting.

Breast cancer is the second leading cause of death in American women, and it is our greatest hope that digital mammography will improve early detection, thereby improving survival rates. The stage at which breast cancer is detected influences a woman's survival. If detected early, the five-year survival rate is 97 percent.

Mammography should be combined with breast self exams and regular breast exams by a doctor or other health care expert.

Q: With all these new technologies, are traditional ultrasounds still useful?

A: Absolutely, especially in obstetrics. Any parent will enthusiastically relate the wonder of seeing their baby move during ultrasound scans in pregnancy.

Beyond being a fascinating view into a baby's private world, ultrasonography has been an extremely useful diagnostic tool in obstetrics for nearly 50 years. Today's ultrasound equipment uses real-time scanners that generate a continuous picture of the moving fetus.

The diagnostic advantages are great for assessing the fetal heart beat and any malformations in the fetus, in addition to taking accurate measurements of gestational age, size and growth in the fetus. ■

Torben Kristensen, M.D., is radiologist who specializes in traditional and emerging diagnostic imaging technologies at Camino Medical Group. He is also on CMG's Board of Directors. He has contributed to the creation of the radiology department at CMG's new Mountain View medical center, which will provide the best diagnostic imaging technologies in Northern California.

worse: cleaning up vomit three times a day or the whining sound whenever my son sees someone eating something.

Another chat with the doctor confirms that we should feed him small amounts of the "BRAT" diet — bananas, rice, applesauce, toast — frequently. That backfires when I feed him a quarter cup of applesauce and then watch him spit it back up (all over both of us) five minutes later.

I call the doctor again in tears. She suggests feeding him crackers — the only solid food he'll keep down — and soy formula to replace the milk he so desperately craves in his bottle. So the new plan is to continually feed him crackers and get him to drink as much Pedialyte as possible.

Unfortunately, this is the only alternative when the child continues to vomit, says Dr. Vereschagin. "This can mean withholding food against the child's wishes when the symptom of vomiting is prominent," he said.

Day 6

A joyous occasion: 24 hours without throwing up. The crackers-and-Pedialyte diet seems to be working. The boy is obviously starting to feel better: more smiling and less lethargy.

Day 7

Mischief Man is back! He's crawling around our home-office, digging through desk drawers and smiling wickedly when he gets hold of something he knows he's not supposed to have.

Now that he's over the flu, how can we keep him from getting it again? Besides the obvious answer — wash hands frequently — the best method of prevention is staying away from sick people. It's up to parents to weigh the cost of being a hermit against the risk of getting sick. ▣
