WATER STORES CASH IN WHERE TAP WATER LEAVES OFF

By Daniel DeBolt

It wasn't long ago that it was hard to imagine a store in nearly every neighborhood selling what was practically free: water.

But with recent concerns about water pollution and additives such as fluoride, chlorine and chloramine, many people believe it's worth paying extra for pure water. Others simply like the taste.

There are four stores in Mountain View selling water by the gallon. The first, Pure Water New World, opened more than 15 years ago on Grant Road and El Camino Real. More recently, Ricky Martinez opened Ricky's Pure Water on Middlefield Road near Whisman Road, and he says that although he has yet to be able to pay himself, business continues to pick up after a year of operation.

On Monday, Martinez was helping a woman buy and load 17 gallons of water. She said she was a regular customer because she doesn't like the taste of tap water, did not like to change the filter in her home filtration system

To bring in more customers, Martinez lowered his price from 35 to 25 cents a gallon. By comparison, Safeway on California Street sells Arrowhead water for $1.37 a gallon, and its lowest-cost Safeway brand water is $1.15 a gallon.

'It's like giving something back to the community — good clean water.'

RICKY MARTINEZ

Many customers buy about 10 gallons a week, Martinez said.

"Most of the Asian customers I have use it for drinking, cooking, washing fruit," he said.

Martinez said he sold about 48,000 gallons in his first year of operation. At 25 cents a gallon that doesn't sound like much of a profit, but he said he makes a lot of his money from selling water bottles and dispensers, which range in cost from $2 to $25. He said he sold seven containers on Tuesday.

To Martinez, the business is all about making his customers comfortable. He keeps his store's white tiles and walls clean and organized. For several years he helped his wife run a day care in their home. Now the former hotel worker enjoys talking to adults, and he works seven days a week for at least nine hours a day.

"It's like giving something back to the community — good clean water," he said.

Martinez also competes with Pure Valley Water around the corner on Moffett Boulevard near Cypress Point Drive. Pure Valley also sells water for 25 cents a gallon with a membership, 39 without. The family-run store has been open for eight years and claims it uses the most advanced water filtration

Address book karma

MOUNTAIN VIEW'S PLAXO KEEPS TABS ON YOUR FRIENDS FOR YOU

By Angela Hey

Homes are morphing into offices. Since when was your address book a real book? Do you still have greeting cards ready for celebrations and commiserations? The head of the household is now home office manager.

Our address books are on the Web, on our computers, on our phones and on paper. With social networking sites proliferating, my true friends' contact information still belongs in my address book. Maintaining address books can be a chore: Do you need that street address any longer?

Plaxo (www.plaxo.com), a Mountain View company, says it has 16 million people using its address book services. You either love it — for its convenience and free services — or hate it, because it sends e-mails whenever your contacts move or have a birthday coming up.

John McCrea, vice president of marketing, describes how at his recruitment interview he asked engineering VP Rikk Carey how Plaxo had changed his life. Carey said it had improved his karma. How can a mundane address book improve karma?

The water is tested twice a year, and goes through nine stages of purification while most stores only do seven, the owner said. The filters are changed three times a year, he added.

Over at Ricky's Pure Water, a window into the back room lets customers see the large chrome filters and plastic tanks. Martinez said the equipment in his store cost him $35,000, an investment he hopes to make back soon.

In the back room of most water stores you can find micron filters, reverse osmosis filters, carbon filters, ozone tanks and a chrome cylinder where water flows around a long UV light as the final step to kill bacteria.

Water store owners say only a few customers have said anything to them about chloramine, the chemical used to disinfect Mountain View's tap water since 2004. Recently, a growing number of local residents — at least 11 people in Mountain View and hundreds more in the Bay Area — have reported strong reactions to chloraminated tap water, including horrific skin rashes and respiratory problems.

At Pure Water New World on Grant Road, owner Johnny Phan showed off a five-foot-tall filter designed to remove all but trace amounts of chloramine from the tap water. At $2,000, the huge chrome cylinder wasn't exactly a hot item in the store.

Even the nine filtration stages in use at the store leave .05 parts per million of chloramine in the water, verified by BSK analytical laboratories in Fresno, Phan said. Citizens Concerned about Chloramine, a local advocacy group, reports that at least one person has had sensitivity to chloramine in water store water.

The safest bet could be distilled water, which is done at Aqua Technology in Sunnyvale for 60 cents a gallon. But Martinez said he doesn't think distilling water is necessary — it removes minerals, doesn't taste as good and no one really asks for it, he said.

Pure Water New World sells its water for 25 cents per gallon, 20 cents for members. The fourth store in Mountain View, Just Pure Water Two on El Camino Real, near Sunnyvale, sells water for 25 cents a gallon using methods similar to the city's other stores to filter the water. Filters there are changed monthly. ▣

First, my karma improves when friends, instead of me, update my address book — a boon for the home office manager. Second, as McCrea recalled Carey telling him, sending a birthday card effortlessly improves business and personal relationships. And third, Plaxo's paid service removes duplicates from your address book. This last feature is particularly useful if you find Microsoft's Active Sync, which manages contacts between MS Outlook and your phone or PDA, creating duplicates when there are very slight differences in an address record.

Finally, when I update my contact information, more than a few contacts will keep in touch by replying to Plaxo's e-mail. As someone who once had 14 addresses in 15 years, sending out change of address notices is just one of the many jobs that Plaxo's service simplifies. There are many more smart applications yet to be created when you have an accurate underlying address book.

Online greeting cards is an area that Plaxo is charging for. Why pay for them when you could just take a picture and send it in an e-mail? Well, if you want to convey style, you might consider paying. I found a cute penguin, for example, in the Plaxo-collection, which was not unlike a Linux logo — ideal for a geek.

Although I could have had a happy-footed penguin on Hallmark's eCard site for free, I preferred the ad-free Plaxo site — and I doubt, without a reminder from Plaxo, I'd have remembered to send a card at all. (Incidentally, if you want to make your own virtual or cuddly penguin www.free-penguin.org is the site for you.)

Plaxo has plenty of room for growth with 16 million users. It is supported on both PCs and Macs, as well as on mobile phones and Mozilla's Thunderbird address book, a companion to the Firefox browser. All without spam or spyware. Plaxo is partnering with major Web address books, and currently has a relationship with AOL, as well as support for gmail, MSN Hotmail and Yahoo! Mail. It plans to open up more interfaces for developers.

Currently located near Shoreline, Plaxo plans to move its 50 local employees to another part of Mountain View. They have stellar investors — Sequoia Capital, for example — with Mike Moritz taking an active role on the board, and Tim Koogler, former Yahoo! CEO, as another investor. As the company expands towards profitability, it is worth taking a fresh look at it — as user, developer or partner. ■

DOES YOUR VEHICLE HAVE A NAME?

Many people are so attached to their vehicles that they give them names and assign them personalities. According to researchers at Colorado State University, more than half of the students surveyed identified their vehicles by gender and about one-third gave them names. It may seem a bit eccentric to assign personalities to automobiles, but researchers say that this behavior may reveal something about the drivers themselves. Specifically, people who assign personalities to their automobiles may exhibit more aggressive driving behavior. This may be due to the fact that these drivers have a more heightened attachment to their vehicles and general driving sensibility. These drivers want to protect and defend what is theirs. After all, friends look out for one another.

We can appreciate dedication to vehicles. Some of us at Larry's AutoWorks have been known to name their car themselves. We care for your car as if it was our own vehicle. Your safety and satisfaction are important to us. We are located at 101 Freeway on Leghorn between San Antonio and Rengstorff in Mountain View. We offer loner cars when you leave your car with us for repair!

HINT: People who assign their automobiles names and personalities are likely to be greater adherents to preventive maintenance because they anticipate the needs of their "loyal friend."
