Google WiFi use continues to grow

LOCAL BUSINESSES, INDIVIDUALS BUILD ON FREE SERVICE

By Daniel DeBolt

Ever since Mountain View's Google WiFi network launched last August, usage has grown an average of 10 percent every month, the company says, and there's no sign of slowing.

"We're seeing steady traffic growth," said Minnie Ingersoll, WiFi project director at Google. "It's exceeded our expectations."

Ingersoll said thousands of people are using the network, with hundreds using it at the city library alone on its newly

"unwired" computers. City officials and business owners say Google has been hard at work to make its WiFi network a success. By now, in fact, it may be the most successful WiFi network in the country.

"We know that Google has been working constantly throughout this year to do upgrades," said Leo Wandling of Expressnets, which installs modems to catch and amplify Google's outdoor signal for indoor use. So far, Expressnets has brought the network to more than 800 Mountain View homes and businesses.

Google itself has been working with property and business owners to extend the signal

Meraki's mission for the Third World

MOUNTAIN VIEW COMPANY AIMS TO BRING WIFI TO 'THE NEXT BILLION PEOPLE'

By Daniel DeBolt

Using Google WiFi as a test bed, a small company sprang up last year in Mountain View to build WiFi modems under the Greek name Meraki.

The word is related to soul, creativity and love, and putting your whole self into it. It's an appropriate name for a company working to bring wireless connectivity to developing countries.

And in Mountain View, Google is using Meraki modems to increase connectivity in the Sahara Mobile Home Park and San Antonio Place.

Backed in part by Google, the company was started last year by former Google intern Sanjit Biswas as an outgrowth of his doctoral research project at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. At first, Biswas and other graduate students at MIT provided themselves with a self-built WiFi system, which pro-into neighborhoods, apartment complexes and mobile home parks, in some cases giving away free modems to businesses.

But Google and Expressnets aren't the only ones working to spread the city's free WiFi. Last year, a Mountain View startup company called Meraki, formed by former Google interns, started designing and selling modems to improve the WiFi signal (see sidebar).

Despite the network's successes in going from an outdoor network to an indoor one, several downtown favorites for laptop users have yet to assimilate. Red Rock Cafe and Dana Street Roasting Company continue to provide their own free WiFi signals, installed long before Google WiFi was released. Red Rock even has a modem to amplify Google WiFi, but employees say the building's brick walls have prevented it from becoming an effective alternative to the cafe's own WiFi signal.

As for the average user, those who are able to get out of DSL and cable Internet provider contracts welcome one less bill.

"It does often lose connectivity or have periods of time where it is amazingly slow," said Christina Molcillo, a resident of the mobile home park on Space Park Way near the Google campus. "But for free wireless, that's fine with me. The Internet is something that should be available to all individuals for free, especially in the Valley. I commend Google for making it happen."

Molcillo added that she would be hesitant to rely on it for working from home or to buy things with her credit card. However, Google will soon be beefing up the optional secure connection, Ingersoll said. A security program can be downloaded at wifi.google.com.

Sahara Mobile Home Park on Grant Road also got some WiFi boosting, with several modems installed in homes, and even on a palm tree, to amplify the area's signal. San Antonio Place, a subsidized efficiency studio complex, has also gotten the WiFi treatment, Wandling said.

Next up, Expressnets is helping to unwire Maryce Freelen Place, a subsidized senior apartment complex.

To add to the numerous projects, Google has unwired the free computers at the library downtown and at the city's new Senior Center on Escuela Avenue.

At wifi.google.com, a map of network nodes shows users where strong signals can be found. For their part, Google employees have a "heat map," as Ingersoll called it, which shows how much each lamp post-mounted node is being used. Downtown nodes are heavily used during lunch, while nodes in or near apartment complexes are used heavily at night.

Google is currently beta testing network nodes that have a stronger connection with the network to allow it to handle more traffic. Ingersoll said all nodes would be updated soon, and users will notice more and more lamp posts with three antennas instead of two.

Those wishing to improve the Google WiFi signal in their home or office may be able to receive improvements straight from Google by filling out a form at wifi.google.com. Expressnets, which sells modems from $129 to $260, can be found online at www.expressnets.com or by calling (650) 964-4569. ▀ gressed to installing a WiFi system into a low-income housing complex.

Since then, Biswas formed a company, became its CEO, and is now working in 25 countries around the world to provide WiFi access in low-income communities. Meraki's work coincides with efforts to build a $100 WiFi-enabled laptop for schoolchildren in developing countries. That project, One Laptop Per Child, is also based at MIT.

Google's WiFi project manager, Minnie Ingersoll, spoke enthusiastically about Meraki. Ellis Berns, the city's economic development manager, said that Mountain View's free Google WiFi network could be "a very good test bed" for companies like Meraki. ▀

PC in your pocket

AS STORAGE IMPROVES, SO DO REASONS FOR USING IT, INCLUDING MOJOPAC AND ZING

By Angela Hey

Laptop, phone, music player, camera, game player or PDA — which of these will you take on your next trip? Or will you take one device that does it all?

Furthermore, will you access information on your own PC, on the Web or on a pocket storage device?

In my first startup, 22 years ago, I spent $1,000 for a 10 MB external drive for an Apple Macintosh computer. The entire company's disk storage for software development and administration could have fitted on one of today's 4 GB flash memory key rings. Now I can spend $100 and get 10,000 MB on a disk that plugs into a USB port on my computer.

Here's another way to look at it: 4 GB will hold about 125,000 of my Voice columns. At one a month, that's enough columns for more than 10,000 years, stored in 25 document boxes.

But whether it's your carry-on bag or disk space, there never seems to be enough room. Just when I think I have enough storage, along come higher quality photos, videos and tunes to devour precious space.

Now there's something else to consume storage: MojoPac software, from Mountain View's RingCube Technologies.

Download MojoPac, select apps and files and put them on your favorite storage device. Then you'll carry your own familiar desktop PC environment in your pocket. Plug your storage device into another PC and it looks just like your own machine.

How much of your PC environment you take with you depends on (a) the size of your storage device and (b) the applications supported by MojoPac. Just like packing a suitcase, you need to make sure you have room. Plenty of PC software is supported, including Web browsers, Apple's iTunes and Adobe Photoshop, as well as games and common office applications.

RingCube has announced that MojoPac Enterprise serves Cloud 10 Technologies' home workers and also Fenwick and West's lawyers. Computer setup for anyone, not least remote workforce or mobile professionals, often is fraught with frustration. MojoPac provides a consistent, secure environment that can support users on their own computers from a server. Earlier this year, RingCube Technologies completed its Series B funding of $12 million when Mohr Davidow Ventures joined first-round investors NEA, bringing VC investment to $16 million.

Another Mountain View company that is leveraging the mobile storage trend is Zing (zing.net). Zing supports storage vendor SanDisk's foray into WiFi-enabled digital music players. Zing announced that it would support SanDisk's Sansa Connect device at the Consumer Electronics Show in January, and now it is shipping.

Sansa Connect, unlike a laptop, cannot deal with WiFi networks that require credit card payments or complex Web browser screens, so an open WiFi network is needed. Music is downloaded from Yahoo's Music Unlimited service, giving users an alternative to iTunes. Zing's technology also enables a portable Sirius satellite radio.

It's going to be hard to crack the iPod market, but Zing is making a valiant attempt. Users are going to want choices — some will trade battery life for wireless, others will trade simplicity for less functionality. Some will want a phone with music and maybe movies, others will want a music player with some wireless connectivity.

Financed by Redpoint Ventures, IDG Ventures and private investors, Zing was recently named to AlwaysOn Network's OnHollywood Top 100 list of hot private digital entertainment companies to watch.

Look for more rich applications on tiny devices with massive storage. Don't lug your laptop any more — the functionality you need may be hanging off your key chain, neck or belt. ■

ESC(APE) CLAUSE

Electronic stability control (ESC) is so effective at saving lives that the government will require automakers to make the safety technology standard on all new vehicles by 2010. Currently about 40 percent of new vehicles come with ESC as standard equipment. This crash-avoidance technology works by automatically applying brakes to individual wheels (making the vehicle more stable) when it senses that the driver may lose control. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration predicts that electronic stability control will save over ten thousand lives a year when all vehicles come equipped with it. In the meantime, car buyers can provide their vehicles with better safety value by choosing ESC as an option if a vehicle doesn't already come so equipped.

ESC is one of many recent innovations in automobile safety. At Larry's AutoWorks, we strive to protect you and your family by continuously putting your safety above all else. We are just off the 101 Freeway on Leghorn between San Antonio and Rengstorf in Mountain View (take the Rengstorf exit south, then right on Leghorn). You can trust that your car, truck, or SUV will receive safe and quality work, every time. Next time you need your vehicle serviced, or if you have a question please call us. We are an AAA approved facility. We also offer loner cars when you leave your car with us for repair! Every car our customers bring to us for service has a technician who is factory-qualified and trained on that vehicle. Keep that in mind. There is a difference here and our customers know it. You'll know it when you entrust your vehicle to us.

HINT: Electronic stability control is thought to be the most effective piece of safety technology to hit the car market since the seat belt.

Profiles in leadership

Editor's Note: Leadership Mountain View (LMV) prepares adults who live, work or have an interest in the city to take on a wide variety of leadership roles in the community. Leadership Mountain View guides 32 individuals through a nine-month program each year and is part of the Mountain View Chamber of Commerce Education Foundation.

JIM BENNETT

Jim Bennett, LMV Class of 2000, has served as the Mountain View Police Department's public information officer since 1996. On July 1, he begins a new adventure with his wife and family in Bend, Oregon.

Bennett started his career as a volunteer Police Explorer with the San Carlos Police Department when he was 15 years old. The experience fed his interest in law enforcement, and provided him with his first real opportunity to make a difference in his community.

In 1996, Bennett joined the Mountain View Police Department after serving in the San Carlos and Santa Clara police departments. Hoping to give back to the program that helped him so much, Bennett became an advisor for the MVPD Volunteer Explorer Post. This position allowed Bennett the opportunity to be a role model for high school- and college-aged youths.

Bennett has watched many Explorers go on to fulfill their dreams, which range from college education to military service to serving on the MVPD. As Bennett says, "Making a difference in the life of a young person and having the opportunity to see them take control of their dreams and make them reality is an incredibly rewarding experience."

Bennett sums up his thoughts about Leadership Mountain View with these words: "During my career and serving as the department's head of outreach, I found my experience through LMV to be invaluable and a primary component of my success. It afforded me the opportunity to meet stakeholders throughout our community and to develop career-long relationships and partnerships and lasting friendships.

"It also provided great insight into the numerous organizations and agencies that give so much to enhance the quality of life for all those who call Mountain View home. In addition to developing professional relationships with business and civic leaders, LMV connected me with community members who, in their own personal way, want to contribute their talents to making Mountain View great."

LMV wishes Bennett and his family all the best in their new home. Bend is lucky to have this family as part of their community.

Leadership Mountain View is now accepting applications for the Class of 2008. For more information, visit www.leadership-mountainview.org or call (650) 930-0525.
