Cancer Center readies for opening

EL CAMINO HOSPITAL'S $2.6 MILLION FACILITY DESIGNED TO 'BRING THE SERVICES TO THE PATIENT'

By Alexa Tondreau

Ever since Dr. Shymali Singhal of El Camino Hospital was appointed director of the new Cancer Center, she's been using "patient-centric" as a mantra of sorts.

"What we are really trying to do here is bring the services to the patient, and not the patient to the services. We want to reduce the frequency that the patient gets bumped around," Singhal said.

The $2.62 million center is scheduled to open at the beginning of July in the Melchor Pavilion, located across the street from the hospital. If all goes according to plan, Singhal said, patients should find the trial of cancer treatment to be more comfortable, more convenient and better organized.

"For most people, after the diagnosis of cancer you spend what feels like your whole existence bouncing around from one doctor's office to another," Singhal said.

The effect of which can make the experience more stressful and time-consuming than necessary, something the hospital wants to eliminate. At the Cancer Center, patients will find everything they need in one centralized location, including a staff of doctors, specialists and nurses who will work together to coordinate patient care, Singhal said.

Additionally, the 10,000-square-foot space lends itself to easier operations. The infusion center, where patients will go to receive chemotherapy, is unlike the normal infusion setup, where patients are grouped together, often in a cramped space, and have to stay for up to eight hours at a time to receive their treatment.

At the Cancer Center, each patient will be stationed at individual units, all of which are located next to windows that overlook the garden. Patients will have their own televisions, quilts and pillows, Singhal said.

The planning for the center, which began in November 2005, included a keen eye for details. For instance, the floor running from the infusion room to the bathroom was installed so it is completely level and smooth, so patients pulling along an I.V. pole won't get caught or trip.

The bathrooms were also built to be extra large, so patients pulling the I.V.s could maneuver easily.

"Patients should have the sense that someone who knows the whole system is watching out for them, and that there is a whole army of people to see them through," Singhal said.

The center hopes to address prevention and end-of-life care as well.

Last month, to coincide with Skin Cancer Awareness Month, Singhal had seven dermatologists perform exams on 230 members of the community for free. In general, she said, she would like to see the center connect with the community at large as often as possible.

"We collect everyone's expertise and do everything we can," she said, adding that "sometimes you can't treat cancer, and so we want to make the transition to the end of life as dignified as possible." ▀

Power bar exam

ARE SPORTS FOODS AND DRINKS AS BENEFICIAL AS THEY CLAIM?

By Dr. Kevin Murray

Q: Do you recommend power bars?
A: Power bars are more popular today than ever. All of them promise energy, nutrition and taste. The answer to how they deliver those things can be found by reading the label.

These convenient snacks can give you a fiber and nutrient boost. Ideally, a bar will have at least 3 grams of fiber. Many contain two servings of fruit, and some healthy nuts. Some of the bars are fortified with nutrients and vitamins, so be cautious not to overdo it, especially if you are already taking vitamin supplements.

Some power bars taste good because they have loads of hidden sugar, making them more like a candy bar than their granola-based cousin. Sugar content should be less than 18 grams. Power bars often contain too much fat. Buy power bars with no trans fats or hydrogenated oils, and less than 3 grams of low saturated fats.

The biggest catch with power bars is their hidden calories — between 180 and 380 calories, depending on the brand, so the bar gives energy but typically is not a light snack.

The best competition for power bars is good old fresh fruits, vegetables and unprocessed nuts. Granola is good, but bananas are better.

Q: Do you recommend sports drinks and vitamin-enhanced water?

A: The market is flooded with enhanced sports drinks. It's common knowledge that you need to stay hydrated, especially when exercising, but you don't need a sports drink to do that.

Based on perceived benefit, Americans spent over $5.4 billion on sports drinks last year. Save your money: Sports drinks don't hydrate better than water. They may help keep people more hydrated only because people are more likely to drink them due to their enticing sweet-tart taste.

Sports drinks do contain electrolytes which are lost from excessive perspiration, and they have fewer calories than juice or soft drinks. Most health experts agree that sports drinks have electrolytes and sodium that are beneficial to professional athletes and marathoners, but have less value for the average user.

In the contest of thirst quenchers, the clear winner is water. To satisfy a sugar craving, opt for all-natural juice like orange or apple that provides calories, energy and nutrients.

Many of the vitamin-enhanced waters contain only small amounts of essential nutrients, so I advise patients to get their nutrition from food.

I think of sports drinks essentially as soft drinks in sheep's clothing. They may seem better, but the increased calories and sugar can detract from the benefits of exercise. For the person trying to control his or her weight, many sports drinks are counterproductive because they contain surplus sugar and calories.

Q: If I exercise daily, do I need more salt in my diet?

A: Not necessarily. Healthy adults should consume salt and water to replace the amount lost each day through sweat. A little salt is important for good health because it helps our bodies absorb many essential nutrients. But you don't need to go out of your way to add salt to your diet because others tend to do it for you.

Salt, or sodium, is a staple on the tables of nearly every American home and restaurant. There's sodium in packaged and prepared foods, and virtually all restaurant foods. Many people tend to forget about salt when they eat out.

For long-term good health, CMG doctors recommend that sodium intake be no greater than 2,200 milligrams per day. That's less than one teaspoon. ▀
