Printing for the people

INFLUENTIAL MEDIUM GETS THE SPOTLIGHT IN EXHIBIT SHOWING MANY TYPES OF PRINTMAKING

By Rebecca Wallace

Upstairs at the Pacific Art League, the Norton Gallery is peaceful and unassuming. Visitors sometimes miss it.

But a fresh breeze blows through, and there are clear views across to Palo Alto City Hall and down to the streets of downtown. The gallery feels very much a part of the wider world, which is fitting for its current show: an exhibit of 20 printmakers.

For hundreds of years, printmaking has been influential in society, giving many people a critical voice, says exhibit juror Kent Maske, a Foothill College art professor and printmaker. While paintings were often seen by only a certain class of people, prints "permeated the masses."

Maske was speaking during the exhibit's reception earlier this month, which drew a friendly crowd, much like the scene in a bustling print studio. In fact, many of the 20 artists have taken classes together at the art league; all are league members.

"Printmaking brings together a community of people," Maske said to the group. "There's an exchange of ideas that is different from artists working solo at their studios."

"You've each helped me see the world differently."

KENT MASKE

He gazed at the prints on the walls. "Look at all the different voices. ... You've each helped me see the world differently."

The walls feature a complex harmony indeed. The works represent a range of printing methods both traditional and modern. Techniques can be quite sophisticated, adding an air of contemplation to the process.

Feeling comfortable with a new method can take a long time, said Viola Ng, an exhibiting artist who has been printing for about seven years.

"In the early years, it's about learning the technique. Now, it's about my voice," she said.

Ng's "Gracie's Blessing Way" is an example of linocut multiple-color reduction. Linocut is a type of relief printmaking: Ng mounts a block of linoleum on wood, then cuts away the areas she doesn't want printed. The higher shapes that are left are then inked. The paper goes on top to print; she either rubs the paper's back or puts the block and paper in a press.

To add another color, Ng inks with the new hue and prints again, after cutting away the linoleum areas that will remain the first color.

The complicated method requires plan-

ALDO BILLINGSLEA STRETCHES THE BOUNDARIES IN THEATREWORKS' 'THE ELEPHANT MAN'

By Molly Stenhouse

The real Elephant Man was John Merrick, a grotesquely deformed 19th century sideshow attraction who became a favorite of Victorian society. The story of how this happened has riveted audiences for decades, and is passed down today in the form of a Tony award-winning play.

Never ones to ignore a challenge, the artistic directors of TheatreWorks decided to take on "The Elephant Man" for themselves, putting Aldo Billingslea, the actor portraying this tragic character, in a serious bind: How does an athletic 6-foot-4, 240-pound actor mimic the movements of a man with scoliosis, painful deformities and (in Billingslea's words) "a 36-inch head supported by a 5-foot-2 frame"?

"Playing Merrick, I realized that he wouldn't reach out his hand to grab an object like I would. He would stretch his arm out, palm facing up, as if to beg for an item," Billingslea said.

In part, the answer involves lots of stretching and Pilates. Despite the discomfort of contorting his body, Billingslea said, dur-

Kids paint a mural at last year's Community Arts Day.

CSMA HOSTS COMMUNITY ARTS DAY

The Community School of Music and Arts is hosting its annual Community Arts Day next Saturday, June 23 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Held at CSMA's Finn Center at San Antonio Circle, the free event is open to the public — particularly children and their families — and features a host of hands-on music and arts activities.

Community members will get the chance to participate in mural and face painting, concerts and family sing-alongs. Clown/balloon artist Twinkie DeeStar will be on hand to provide entertainment, and musical artist "Papa" David Sharpe of the musical act "Papahugs" will perform two concerts, at 12:30 p.m. and 2 p.m.

Info booths on child health and safety, along with snacks and other goodies, will be available to participants as well. The event is co-sponsored by First 5 Santa Clara County.

For more information, visit www.arts4all.org.

'SPACE IS BLUE' PREMIERS AT THE PEAR

Mountain View's Pear Avenue Theatre is presenting the world premiere of "Space Is Blue (and the Birds Fly in It)" beginning June 29.

Written by Gregory Meyer and directed for The Pear by Ann Kuchins, the full-length play dwells on the link between scientific truth and human experience. The story follows a self-styled "family" of loners, related by friendship, who struggle over the fate of a brilliant child.

"Space Is Blue" is the sixth full-length play to premier at The Pear. Tickets are $10 to $25, and shows are Thursdays through Saturdays at 8 p.m. and Sundays at 2 p.m. The play is scheduled to run through July 15.

The Pear is located at 1220 Pear Ave. Call (650) 254-1148 or visit www.thepear.org.

PRINTING

ning. Adding multiple layers of color means ensuring the paper always lines up on the block in the same place. And once you cut away linoleum, it's gone.

"Gracie's Blessing Way" is a four-color print, with a mother and baby in the center. The two are surrounded by brighter colors and images of a necklace and dragonfly. Ng made the print for a friend who recently had a baby; the artist was inspired by a Navajo ritual for new mothers.

"All her friends bring a bead for her and make a birthing necklace; she's supposed to wear it ... to ensure a healthy delivery," Ng says.

Maske approaches and praises Ng's work: "It's so celebratory."

The dragonfly in the print represents Ng herself, symbolizing following one's heart. The Menlo Park artist works in high-tech but will soon finish a degree in art studio from the UC Berkeley extension.

Connections abound among the printmakers here. For one, Ng studied with exhibit curator Karen Donaldson under the late Carol Doyle, a longtime Pacific Art League teacher. Donaldson also has a linocut print on display, the wistful landscape "Days End."

Donaldson used to create pastel landscapes but was drawn to the graphic and dimensional natures of prints. Now she's been making prints for 12 years at the art league, and also teaches linocut and introductory printmaking. And she still acknowledges the medium's challenges.

"You're carving and hoping that the image comes up," she says with a laugh.

Also on display are several intaglio works, which are in a sense the opposite of relief prints. Rather than cutting away a block and printing from the raised shapes that are left behind, a printer carves lines into a surface (or lets an acid bath "bite" away lines on a metal plate, as in an etching) and then fills them with ink to print.

One of the most striking works is Daniel Krakauer's etching "Bird Couple." Unusual images — a bird, a house on fire, a skeletal man — invite fanciful stories to explain their proximity. In his artist's statement, Krakauer said he made several pictures, and then shuffled the image plates to print random combinations.

Nearby is Denise Rabius' intaglio etching "Trees at Night." Its minimal, graceful redwoods and rocks came from a camping trip, she says.

"I love printing because you can utilize texture," she says. From a distance, too, the print becomes more geometric as the viewer notices the shapes created by crisscrossing branches.

Despite printmaking's methodical nature, it can yield surprises. Patricia Machmiller's monotype "in transit," inspired by airport crowds, has ghostly silhouettes of people alone or in groups. Monotypes are typically made with ink on a smooth surface; Machmiller put ink on acrylic plates, with wax paper cutouts creating the people. The paper was placed on top to print.

Machmiller used two plates, one for yellow ink and one for blue. But somewhere in the process she neglected to flip over the cutout of a little girl. While the other people are yellow, the girl remained white. Now she draws the viewer's eye and curiosity.

Machmiller smiles at the girl, saying, "It's a wonderful accident." ■ ing 96 hours of rehearsal he “only tweaked his knee once.”

But the difficulties in playing Merrick aren’t merely physical: “This character was so marginalized due to his deformities that there was no culture or subculture where he fit,” Billingslea said.

“Though people were charmed by him, he was almost completely alone. Everyone overlooked his humanity.”

Founding artistic director Robert Kelley, who calls Billingslea a “local light,” said no make-up or prosthetic aids were used to help portray Merrick. “It’s nothing like Lynch’s movie.”

“The more realistic the recreation of Merrick is, the less successful you’re likely to be,” Kelley said, adding it’s more effective to “let your imagination do the work.”

This results in high-intensity moments in the play, such as a “beautiful scene,” Billingslea said, between Merrick and Mrs. Kendall (played by Rebecca Duns), a famous actress of the era who is surprisingly unafraid of the Elephant Man’s horrific countenance.

“She literally and figuratively reveals herself” to him, Billingslea said. From this experience, Merrick “wonders if he’ll ever experience what it means to be a sexual being.”

For Billingslea, the play is about “judging a person by the content of their character.” He says this lesson is relevant because “the world keeps getting made smaller by technology,” and the majority of people “won’t look like you or me.”

Kelley said it’s been a fun and exciting ride for the director and actors, because the play is so “wonderfully theatrical.”

“This is a play that moves people,” he said. ■
