ZERO / ZERO GRAVITY YES / DOLLARS NO

SPACE TOURISM TICKETS CAN SET YOU BACK $20 MILLION — OR $4,000 FOR A WEIGHTLESS RIDE AT MOFFETT

By Angela Hey

Last month, the Computer History Museum hosted Charles Simonyi, a former Microsoft executive who paid $20 million for a vacation on the International Space Station. In the form of a play-by-play recounting of his adventure, he gave some fascinating, personal insights into space travel.

First, the training: Simonyi spun in centrifuges, practiced wearing a spacesuit and was examined by numerous doctors. He also had to learn wilderness survival techniques — just in case the Soyuz capsule landed in a remote place that couldn't be reached easily by a ground crew. Having learned Russian in school, Russian language lessons came naturally.

Then, liftoff: Simonyi recounted how the launch feels more gradual than it appears to observers, who are used to seeing a fiery blastoff. When the countdown was at 10, he began to hear fluids flowing in the ship, even through his space helmet and earphones. Shudders and vibrations preceded a gradual liftoff.

Once he got to the space station, Simonyi was engrossed in experiments and out-of-earth experiences. For example, the surface tension on a drop of water makes it more like a cream that you can spread on your face. He showed the audience how an astronaut caught a ball of apple juice in his mouth.

For the descent back to earth, Simonyi said, he was asked to clutch some books, while strapped into his seat, as there was no room to stow them. (His seat had been specially molded to protect his body from the shock of landing.) Fortunately, they had an uneventful landing and the ground crew rolled the space capsule around, avoiding the hot base, so that he could crawl out.

Find out more about Simonyi's adventures on www.charlesinspace.com. You can also find out when the International Space Station is visible in the night sky at www.jsc.nasa.gov/sightings.

Also last month, Sir Richard Branson announced that "2008 really will be the Year of the Spaceship," and that his Virgin Galactic company (www.virgin-galactic.com) is a step closer to taking astronauts into space. The company will test its White Knight Two mothership this summer, and launches SpaceShipTwo, which is currently about 60 percent complete, at Burt Rutan's Scaled Composites firm in the Mojave Desert.

More than 80 of its first passengers already have been through centrifuge training and medical examinations, the company says, adding that more than 200 potential astronauts have signed up with Virgin Galactic, and about 85,000 people have registered interest in going into space. Tickets cost $200,000 with deposits beginning at $20,000.

For some, the closest experience to a space adventure is a zero-gravity flight. Zero Gravity Corporation (www.gozerog.com), also known as ZERO-G, is a leader in entry-level space tourism. In a promotional move, the company gave weightless flights last month out of Moffett Field, and plans to return on July 26.

The cost for a ticket is about $4,150 (including tax) for a 90-minute flight in which ZERO-G's "G-Force-One," a customized Boeing 727-200, will do about 15 parabolas. For each one, riders experience half a minute of weightlessness. The plane can take over 30 people at once.

San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom was among the passengers on last February's Moffett Field flight. Even wheelchair-bound Professor Stephen Hawking has taken a flight — in a specially padded plane and with an entourage of medical staff. Although passengers can take motion sickness prescriptions from their doctor beforehand, most do not need it, and find the experience enjoyable, according to the company.

And if all those options are out of your budget range, don't forget there's a free NASA Ames Exploration Center at Moffett Field with wonderful space exhibits. ■

How to help the hungry

SUMMER IS WHEN FAMILIES MOST RELY ON GROUPS LIKE MOUNTAIN VIEW'S CSA

By Jennifer Pence

During the holidays, many people contribute to food drives at offices, schools and places of worship. These commendable efforts help ensure that even those with meager incomes enjoy a full meal over the holidays.

But what about those who have trouble making ends meet at other times of the year — or all year long?

Lynn Crocker of Second Harvest Food Bank explains that the need for food is actually greater during the summer: "When school is out, parents must provide meals to children who may qualify for free lunch and breakfast during the school year. This can strain already tight budgets."

Second Harvest is the food bank that supplies 400 partner organizations in San Mateo and Santa Clara counties. Forty-four percent of Second Harvest's food and cash donations come in during its holiday food and fund drive from mid-October until mid-January. The food collected during this drive lasts until spring. Then, demand for food continues, but food donations have stopped, so Second Harvest begins using its cash donations to purchase food until the next fall.

Crocker explains that "food insecurity" and nutritional problems are major issues for low-income families. For example, it costs $18.16 to buy 1,000 calories of nutritious food (such as fruits and vegetables), but only $1.76 for 1,000 calories of non-nutritious food (junk food). People on tight budgets tend to shift to less nutritious foods since it is easier to cut food costs than fixed payments such as rent. Unfortunately, these decisions have negative health consequences that are costly both to those individuals and to society as a whole.

More people than ever are in need of food right now due to high fuel costs, the meltdown in the sub-prime mortgage market, and a general economic slowdown. Second Harvest experienced a 10 percent increase in demand for food this winter,

Profiles in leadership

Editor's Note: Leadership Mountain View (LMV), a nine-month program of the Mountain View Chamber of Commerce Education Foundation, each year teaches leadership skills to 35 adults who live, work or have an interest in Mountain View. It has graduated 500 people since 1989. The profile below is one in a series that will run periodically to highlight the accomplishments of LMV graduates.

MARY MOORE

It is hard to believe that Mary Moore has lived in Mountain View less than 10 years. In addition to being executive assistant to the superintendent and Board of Trustees for our local high school district (after holding a similar position in Lake Tahoe for 15 years), she is well known for handling daunting people-organizing tasks — such as organizing two group trips to China and a beer-pouring squad (for LMV fund-raising) at Shoreline Amphitheatre.

She also volunteers at MVCPA, has mentored students, serves on the Mountain View Library Foundation board, and has been on the Leadership Mountain View Council since she graduated from the program in 2000.

Mary's super-volunteer status followed quickly after her LMV experience. Though new to town at that time, she found "instant community connection, knowledge about what our community is doing, and amazing friends." She has leaped at all the newly discovered leadership, professional and volunteer opportunities possible, approaching each new challenge with unflagging enthusiasm.

Her notion of retirement: "Join the Peace Corps or VISTA ... and volunteer with the National Ski Patrol."

Join Leadership Mountain View for our Second Annual Leadership Symposium on Wednesday, March 5. For more information, go to www.leadershipsymposium.eventbrite.com.

PENCE

and believes that this may be just the tip of the iceberg since people who have not previously gone to food banks are often reluctant to begin doing so, even as their situation becomes more desperate.

This situation is compounded by the fact that donations have decreased. Tom Myers, executive director of the Community Services Agency in Mountain View, says charitable donations from individuals are one of the first things to decline in a weak economy.

Furthermore, while CSA is able to obtain food not just from Second Harvest but from local grocery stores, farmers markets and Hidden Villa (an organic farm in Los Altos Hills), legal liability now prohibits other organizations, including Second Harvest, from accepting food from stores and restaurants, reducing their sources of food donations.

What can you do to help? Surprisingly, the best answer may not be to go out and buy food to give to a food bank (although food donations are always welcome). The following options are more efficient ways to provide food to those who need it at a lower cost to you:

■ Donate fruit from your fruit trees: Pick it yourself and take it to the Community Services Agency, or have Village Harvest volunteers pick it for you and take it to an organization that can use it. For more info, call CSA at (650) 968-0836 or Village Harvest at (888) FRUIT-411.

■ Donate money: Food banks can buy more food for $50 than you can, because they can often get it for just the cost of shipping. Write a check to CSA or Second Harvest.

■ Clean out your cupboards: Do you still have those cans of pumpkin and cranberry sauce that you didn't use at Thanksgiving, or other food items that you may not use before they expire? Take them to CSA.

Additionally, you can have fun and help fight hunger by dining at restaurants participating in CSA's "Chefs Who Care" program. (The most recent event was at Tarragon in Sunnyvale, where a 3-course meal was $24 per person, and half of that went to CSA.) Register on CSA's Web site at csacares.org, where you can also learn about CSA's Spring Gala on April 5 and Empty Bowls Soup Supper on April 13. ■
