CORRECTIVE LASER EYE SURGERY, OR LASIK, WORKS WELL — AT LEAST FOR THIS VOICE REPORTER

By Kathy Schrenk

I had been mentally ready for Lasik for a few years. But I had my two sons fairly close together, and women can't have Lasik while pregnant or nursing because their hormones can change the shape of the eye.

Lasik, an acronym for "Laser-Assisted In Situ Keratomileusis," has been around for decades but wasn't perfected until the last 15 years or so. It's now so easy, all you need is a few thousand dollars and an hour.

So, as soon as I was done nursing my youngest for a couple months (the advised wait time) I asked around and found that Dr. Mark Volpicelli, an ophthalmologist based on Castro Street with more than 9,200 laser eye surgeries under his belt, came highly recommended.

I made an appointment to be evaluated at his office. Before my appointment I consulted my father-in-law, who happens to be an ophthalmologist. He looked at Dr. Volpicelli's qualifications online and approved, with the caveat that being evaluated by the surgeon himself before the surgery is crucial.

Dr. Volpicelli did, indeed, see me himself. A number of tests deemed that I was qualified for Wavefront Lasik, the state-of-the-art in laser vision correction. Wavefront makes the procedure highly individualized and has been shown to have even better results than standard Lasik. I made an appointment on the spot.

I arrived at the office half an hour before the surgery was scheduled. The nurse and Dr. Volpicelli re-did some of the tests I had undergone a month previous, to make sure the results matched and nothing about my eyes had changed. Many drops were administered, most importantly the numbing drops.

The doctor took a pad of paper and a computer disc with him from the exam room and told the nurse, Gigi Dovigi, he would do a few more calculations and then load the machine.

Dovigi said I should look at the clock in the operating room before lying down. When I sat up, I would be able to see, she said. I think I half believed her.

She had me put down my glasses — for the last time. She guided me to the operating room, telling me to watch out for a cord taped to the floor, which of course I could barely see. I laid flat on a bench next to the laser machine.

Dovigi asked me if I was cold, which I was, so she put a blanket over me. She then gave me a teddy bear to hold on to, which I regarded skeptically. Once the procedure started, I was still

Medicine's last taboo

By Dr. Vivien D'Andrea

When CBS news anchor Katie Couric had her colonoscopy televised to raise awareness about colon cancer screening, the importance of having open discussions about sensitive medical topics became clear. Today, patients and doctor freely discuss issues once hidden by shyness and embarrassment on both sides, and the result is better health care. However, there is one last big taboo in medicine: Discussions about death and end-of-life care.

Q: I'm healthy, why should I care about end-of-life care?

A: No one likes to think about his or her own mortality, including your doctor. Studies show that despite efforts to help doctors start these discussions with patients, few do. However, saying that talking about end-of-life care is only for the very elderly or terminally ill is like saying that having a will or a life insurance plan is only for those who know they are near death.

Make sure your family knows what your wishes would be if you were to suffer a catastrophic injury or illness, and know what their wishes are as well. A good place to start is by filling out an advance health care directive (AHCD). An AHCD is a document that authorizes a person you trust to make decisions about your health care in the event you can't. This includes deciding when further treatment will only prolong pain and suffering.

Most doctors will provide a standard AHCD form that you can fill out and add to your medical record. At our medical group, the Palo Alto Medical Foundation, you also can pick up AHCD forms in both English and Spanish in our community health resource centers or download them from www.pamf.org/preventive/ahcd.html.

Q: My mother has terminal cancer, but she doesn't want hospice care because she thinks it will be a financial burden on us. Is hospice expensive?

A: The belief that hospice care is costly and not covered by insurance is one of the reasons why the majority of people who die in California each year fail to take advantage of all of the end-of-life care benefits available to them. California patients spend roughly 21 days in hospice — well below the national average — despite the fact that they are eligible to be referred to hospice for the last 180 days of life.

Because hospice care may have more benefits for you and your mother without additional cost, it is worth looking into. Ask your doctor for the name of a local hospital or clinic health center where trained volunteers can help you learn about hospice benefits you may be entitled to and help you fill out an AHCD form.

A good place to find out more about hospice is at free community lectures, such as the End-of-Life Planning Workshop the Palo Alto Medical Foundation will hold on Saturday, Nov. 15 from 1 to 4 p.m. at its Mountain View Center, 701 E. El Camino Real, Third Floor Conference Room D. ▀

Vivien D'Andrea, M.D. is an internal medicine specialist and chair of the Department of Medicine, Camino Region, at the Mountain View Center of the Palo Alto Medical Foundation.

HEALTH VAN COMES TO LAHS

The Lucille Packard Children's Hospital Teen Health Van has begun visiting the Los Altos High School campus, offering health care services to the approximately 250 students there who lack health insurance.

The van has been providing free care to high schools, continuation schools and homeless shelters since 1996, but only began coming to Los Altos High last month. Once a month at the high school, it will offer the services of a doctor, a social worker, a nurse practitioner, a registered nurse, an administrative assistant and a dietitian free of charge.

The van started coming to the high school thanks to a $68,000 grant from El Camino Hospital. The grant is part of the hospital's Community Benefit Program, which recently began donating $5 million a year from property tax receipts to local programs.

By helping students early on, the van saves $10 in future medical care for every dollar it spends now, said Seth Ammerman, the doctor running the program. The staff takes a medical history every six months to track outcomes.

OCTOBER IS BREAST CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

Local medical centers are offering special educational resources this month as part of Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

The Palo Alto Medical Foundation has launched a new Web site providing women with information about breast cancer, as well as treatment options and support programs. The site features stories from breast cancer survivors and links to other online resources. It can be found at <http://pamf.org/breastcancer>.

In addition, PAMF has been holding a number of public events throughout the month, including a health fair and lectures by medical professionals.

El Camino Hospital's Web site, located at <http://elcaminohospital.org>, also offers information on breast cancer. On Nov. 1, the hospital will be holding a women's health fair featuring actress Lisa Rinna as keynote speaker.

tense, despite the Valium, and I found holding on to her hand and hearing her encouraging words to be very comforting.

Dr. Volpicelli swung the machine over my face and directed me to look at the blinking red light. He put a couple pieces of tape over my left eye and held my right eyelids open with a small device. He added some more numbing drops, then used a sort of suction cup to hold my eyeball steady.

Finally, it was time for the cut. It was hard to tell what exactly was happening. But there was a moment when I saw some movement across my eyeball and I thought, "Oh my gosh, that's him lifting the flap!" I decided it was time to start thinking happy thoughts; for me, that entails ambling through a meadow in Yosemite Valley.

Dr. Volpicelli described each step in detail: He spreads the eyelids, administers drops, secures the eyeball, more drops, has me look at the light and makes sure my eye is on the right track, then makes the incision, then directs the laser and pushes a button.

It was all over very quickly. I'm sure I was lying on that bench for less than 10 minutes. And I didn't feel a thing.

When I sat up, I could read the clock.

After another check of my eyes back in the exam room, I was free to go. It had only been an hour since my husband dropped me off and left with our kids. I could clearly see my little boy waving to me across the parking lot, with no glasses and no contacts.

Dovigi had given me a small bag full of eye drops and instructions for when and how to administer them: artificial tears every half hour for the first day and every hour for the next several days, plus antibiotic and anti-inflammatory drops twice that first day and four times a day for the following five days. I had a scheduled check-up the next day, Saturday morning, and a follow-up one week later.

A small percentage of people who get Lasik have poor outcomes: blurred vision, poor night vision and even vision loss.

Estimates are 1 percent or less for severe problems. Dr. Volpicelli says that in 9,200 surgeries, he had only one complication, and that was an eye infection, treatable with antibiotics.

As of this writing, it's been 10 days since the surgery, and my eyes feel great. At my one-week follow-up, Dr. Volpicelli said my vision was 20-20. It still seems unbelievable to me: After totally relying on contacts or glasses for 27 years, I can now see nearly perfectly, unassisted, after a 10-minute, painless procedure. It feels like a miracle. ■
