Heavyweights discuss Bayshore's future

GOOGLE, MICROSOFT, NASA AMES ATTEND GENERAL PLAN MEETING

By Daniel DeBolt

A city-run General Plan meeting Tuesday drew some high-profile participants — including Google, Microsoft and NASA Ames — with the goal of bringing Silicon Valley ingenuity to the problems facing development of the North Bayshore area over the next 20 years.

The federal and corporate participants are among the powerful forces in the Bayshore area that wish to help plot the future of the office neighborhood north of Highway 101 and east of Stevens Creek. The meeting was held in the Maxwell conference room at Google's Crittenden Lane campus.

City planning director Randy Tsuda kicked things off by explaining that the North Bayshore neighborhood was one of nine areas identified by the city as places where significant change was possible. The city does not intend to revise its General Plan for existing residential neighborhoods. creaky, a little stale. It's getting hard to respond to requests because of those policies," Tsuda said.

Everyone present appeared to agree that the North Bayshore area needed to develop more densely than current General Plan and zoning regulations allow.

"Out here there is no land to build on. The only way to go is up."

JAY BECHTEL, GOOGLE

"Out here there is no land to build on," said Jay Bechtel, real estate and construction manager for Google. "The only way to go is up."

But how to do it without causing major traffic problems in and out of the North Bayshore area, described by some as an "island" accessible by only two streets, was a top concern.

Tsuda said the city's current General Plan had helped Mountain View become "the capital of Silicon Valley," but that the policies, created in the 1980s, were "getting a little

Council decides on 'less painful' cuts

TASK OF BALANCING BUDGET COULD LEAD TO MORE DIFFICULT DECISIONS NEXT YEAR

By Daniel DeBolt

With some adjustments, the Mountain View City Council supported most of the general fund budget as recommended by the city manager Tuesday night.

Facing a $6 million deficit, the council made $4 million in cuts to parks maintenance, city planning, street maintenance, code enforcement, public works staff and library services, among other things. The council used $2.2 million in reserves to fill the rest of the gap.

Though the meeting took over three hours, the council appeared relaxed as it did the "horse trading" required to trim the budget, an exercise that was a first for most members.

"I don't want to leave a legacy that we were not able to create sustainable budgets," said council member Jac Siegel.

The general fund budget was cut from almost $90 million to about $86 million. The cut was necessary because tax and other revenues are shrinking while salary costs are on the rise by $3.8 million a year. Historic revenue and budget trends were presented on a graph to show that, without cuts, a budget gap could compound for decades.

"Frankly this budget has little or no margin for error," said city manager Kevin Duggan, who projects minimal "carryover balance" at the end of the year.

"Many safety nets have been removed," he said.

Duggan also reminded council members that the state was probably going to take $2.5 million from the general fund and $1.8 million from the Shoreline community fund within the next year — a fact which was not accounted for and would probably require the use of reserves, which Duggan says could be quickly diminished if spending goes unchecked.

In a straw vote, council members Laura Macias and Margaret Abe-Koga were the only members in favor of temporarily lowering the city's general fund reserve from 25 percent to 24 percent of the general

'Intent on causing trouble'

POLICE BELIEVE SHORELINE STABBERS CAME TO CONCERT WITH MAYHEM IN MIND

By Daniel DeBolt

The violent melees in which six people were stabbed at an oldies rock concert at Shoreline Amphitheatre last weekend appears to have been the work of a group of attendees who specifically came to start fights, police said.

"It seems like there were a lot of people who came to the concert to cause problems," said police spokesperson Liz Wylie. "It seems like they were probably intent on causing trouble

All is revealed

SOME READERS wondered about a cryptic message I put at the end of last week's column: "Amazing Racers: Head for City Hall!"

I am now able to explain what this remark meant, why I put it there, and what it all has to do with last Sunday's TV news footage of Superintendent Maurice Ghysels playing guitar in the Shoreline Amphitheatre parking lot like some errant Deadhead.

It all begins with the Amazing Race of Bubb School, a yearly treasure hunt-esque event put together, this time, by Bubb mom Cynthia Greaves.

"There were nine teams, eight families and a team of teachers, for a total of 45 racers," Greaves explained. (You might have noticed the racers running around last weekend due to the green capes they were wearing.)

"The nine teams had to follow route information, delivered in verse, that would get them to a spot where they had to complete a challenge." These challenges included math, paddleboating, "smash ball with sodden sponges," and, following the "waveboard challenge," my own column as follows:

The next clue is so well hidden, you will rejoice

When you successfully find it buried in the Voice.

For information hunting you must be a predator.

Don't know where to start? Ask the editor.

I love this stuff! Needless to say, my column's clue sent the caped racers off to City Hall.

Somewhere along the line, too, the racers wound up in the Amphitheatre parking lot, where they encountered merry troubadour Ghysels playing a very fine guitar. (Their challenge here

FORMER COUNCIL MEMBER WRAPS UP 25-YEAR CAREER ON SUPERIOR COURT BENCH

By Daniel DeBolt

The only Mountain View resident to ever become both mayor and a Superior Court judge retired last week. And 400 friends, family and colleagues gathered at his retirement party May 28 in his downtown San Jose courtroom.

Judge Leslie C. Nichols, who also was a Mountain View

City Council member from 1977 to 1985, was praised by those who worked with him.

"I think it is a shame to lose him as a judge," said lawyer Andrew Taber, who had tried land use cases under Nichols who was responsible for all lawsuits in Santa Clara County having to do with the California Environmental Quality Act, which often put him at odds with real estate developers.

"He would read thousands of pages," Taber said. "He was very diligent; he always rendered a quick decision."

Nichols, 68, was appointed to the Superior Court in 1980 after 17 years of having a private law practice in Palo Alto. This was the same year he was mayor in Mountain View and

German school graduates its first class

By Casey Weiss

As students across the city turn their tassels this month, the festivities are extra special for nine seniors who make up the first graduating class of the German International School of Silicon Valley.

The seniors graduated on May 22, and all of them received a California diploma while also completing their German secondary education.

GISSV came to Mountain View in 2000, after a small group of German transplants started the program so their children could receive a bilingual education.

"There were a few German families that wanted the same education that their students would get in Germany," said Anja Friebe, the school's marketing coordinator.

Nine years later, the private school, located on Easy Street, offers preschool, elementary, middle and high school classes, and its students graduate fluent in both English and German, Friebe said.

The school meets all the German education requirements, and receives partial funding from the German government to help subsidize the private tuition. Students are also prepared to take the SAT and Advanced Placement tests with their American peers.

The nine graduating GISSV seniors are all eventually going on to college, Friebe said. Some are staying in the U.S. to attend the University of California system, while others are returning home to Germany to continue their education.

Many of the school's families are expatriates from Germany, but GISSV also has some American students whose parents want them to learn a foreign language.

Friebe said students take half of their classes in German, half in English, and also have the option of taking Spanish and French classes.

"A student can finish the school with four languages, which is pretty cool," she said. "It helps them to learn other languages later." ▣

Locals: New chancellor should be tech-savvy

By Casey Weiss

As Foothill-De Anza searches for a new chancellor, it should seek out someone "technologically innovative" and environmentally inclined, district residents and staffers said during public forums this week.

The district began a national search late last month after President Barack Obama nominated the current chancellor, Martha Kanter, to be undersecretary of education. A committee of district residents, students and employees is leading the search.

"These are some pretty big shoes to fill," De Anza spokesperson Marisa Spatafore said during one forum. "The person needs to be someone who can work internally and externally."

The committee, headed by former vice chancellor Jane Enright, held five community forums over the week to receive comment from local residents. It hopes to hold interviews in October and present three to five finalists to the board of trustees this winter.

The district already has a list of ideal characteristics for a chancellor, but it has not been updated since Kanter was hired in 2003. According to this list, the ideal candidate should have "visionary, passionate and thoughtful leadership," "excellent communication skills" and past successes with fund-raising and resource development.

At one lightly attended forum on Tuesday, participants agreed that it is also important for the new chancellor to be environmentally conscious and at the forefront of technology.

"Silicon Valley will still be leading the rest of the world when we have economic recovery," said Sukhjit Singh, a De Anza computer science professor.

Trustees are scheduled to make a final decision Dec. 1. Until then, Mike Brandy, vice chancellor of business services, is filling in as interim chancellor.

District residents can e-mail suggestions by June 5 to chancellorprofile@fdha.edu. ▣

An altercation between a Caltrain passenger and conductor ended with the passenger being removed from the train at the downtown Mountain View station, and resulted in delays for several trains Monday morning.

The incident was reported just after 8 a.m. The train on which the altercation occurred was held at the Mountain View station while police were summoned and the passenger was removed, Caltrain spokeswoman Christine Dunn said. She did not know whether anyone on the train was injured.

Southbound trains No. 314 and 216, and northbound trains No. 329 and 327, were delayed by up to 25 minutes, Dunn said. Trains were expected to be back on schedule by 9 a.m., she said.

The Spice Island Cafe in Mountain View was damaged in a one-alarm fire Saturday morning, according to the Mountain View Fire Department.

Firefighters responded around 11 a.m. to the restaurant at 210 Hope St. and located a kitchen fire inside, fire officials said. The blaze was quickly brought under control, and no injuries were reported.

The flames reportedly damaged the kitchen area and the hood's duct system that extends to the second story. The cause of the fire remains under investigation.

CAL FIRE DECLARES
BEGINNING OF FIRE SEASON

The Cal Fire Santa Clara Unit has announced that fire season begins Monday in Santa Clara, Contra Costa and Alameda counties, and that all open burning permits will be suspended in areas under the agency's control.

The start of fire season varies throughout the state and is based on local weather conditions, vegetation and increased fire activity, according to Cal Fire.

Responding to increasingly warm and dry local conditions, unit chiefs hire seasonal firefighters, increase dispatch levels and operate fire response facilities at all times.

Agriculture, land management, fire training and other industrial-type burning may continue if a Cal Fire official inspects the burn site and issues a permit.

Cal Fire officials are reminding homeowners to follow basic fire safety measures as the season progresses, such as creating defensible space around all structures and preparing an evacuation plan for family members and pets.

More information regarding fire safety precautions is available online at www.fire.ca.gov.

Hangar deal falling apart?

NAVY, NASA CAN'T AGREE ON PLAN TO RE-SKIN HISTORIC LANDMARK

By Daniel DeBolt

Preservationists are concerned that negotiations between the Navy and NASA to re-skin the historic Hangar One are slowing to a halt.

The issue is expected to take center stage at the next Restoration Advisory Board, or RAB, meeting on June 11.

"The negotiations between NASA and the Navy aren't happening right now," said Lenny Siegel, director of the Mountain View-based Center for Public Environmental Oversight.

NASA Ames deputy director Lew Braxton said it was "inaccurate" to say that talks to replace the massive historic hangar's toxic siding had "come to a halt," but admitted that coming to a "win-win" deal has been a "struggle." Navy spokesperson John Hill said that talks had "slowed," and placed some blame on NASA for not having a plan for the hangar, while making it clear that the Navy was moving forward with its plan to remove the toxic siding material, with or without a coordinating plan with NASA to replace the siding.

To the chagrin of preservationists, the Navy could end up leaving Hangar One as a bare skeleton

In March, it appeared that the Navy and NASA had nearly reached an agreement: The Navy would put a new skin on the hangar, and in return NASA Ames would take on some additional responsibility for cleaning up the toxic substances left around Moffett Field by the Navy, freeing the Navy of obligations that could extend for decades. Cash-strapped NASA would rather pay the incremental costs for environmental cleanup than the high up-front cost of restoring the hangar.

Braxton said that "there has been correspondence back and forth between NASA and the Pentagon," but noted disagreements over "liabilities or financial responsibilities." For one, NASA and the Navy disagree about what it costs to re-skin the hangar. The Navy says it would take $15 million, but NASA says the price is actually much higher. Braxton said NASA wants to ensure the hangar is "water tight" once the re-skinning is finished so that NASA isn't left with any unexpected costs to finish the project.

In an e-mail, Hill explained the Navy's position.

"Navy discussions on integrating NASA's reuse efforts, which include re-siding the hangar ... have slowed as a result of NASA not being able to finalize a reuse for the hangar or a plan to re-side the hangar at this time," Hill wrote. "The Navy is continuing its ... action and will leave Hangar One in a suitable state for any future reuse NASA chooses to pursue."

"They have set aside funds already to do the cleanup but what they don't have is the necessary funding to do the re-skinning," Braxton said of the Navy, adding that appropriating the Navy's cleanup funds to hangar restoration may not be possible.

Braxton called it "unwise" to not coordinate the siding removal by the Navy and replacement by NASA because an uncoordinated effort would cost more money. Siegel says it may be the public's last big chance to push for a realistic plan to preserve the historic hangar.

Because of the economy, private businesses that might want to lease the hangar from NASA won't commit to the high up-front cost of re-skinning Hangar One.

Both the Navy and NASA plan to give updates on Hangar One at the RAB meeting, which is Thursday, June 11 at 7 p.m. in Building 943, located just outside the Moffett Field main gate. ■

If all this sounds like a lot of fun, that's because it was. Best of all, the event "raised more than $2,000 in bids from the silent auction," according to Greaves, and that money will go towards the further education of these lucky youngsters. ■

No police cuts for now — but 'tier two' option has some concerned

By Daniel DeBolt

The Mountain View Police Department escaped the chopping block as the city's budget was carved out Tuesday. But like their firefighter counterparts, police could face painful cuts in the future if the city hopes to balance its budget amid economic turmoil.

Eight of the city's 100 sworn police officers may have to look for work elsewhere in the next few years, according to a list of last-resort "tier two" cuts to police services totaling $1.37 million created by city manager Kevin Duggan after discussions with police Chief Scott Vermeer.

Faced with budget realities, some City Council members are wondering how much the community values its police services compared to other city services, such as library service, park and street maintenance and recreation programs. Without cuts to public safety, other basic services will have to be pared back.

Some city officials say the police and fire department budgets have grown disproportionately over the years to about half of the city's $88 million general fund. Thirty-one percent, or $27 million, goes to police.

Under the potential cuts, five of the city's eight community service officers would be out of a job, saving the city $108,000 in salary and benefits for each position for a total of $540,000. In addition, three police agents — a supervisor rank below sergeant — would be let go so the city could save $528,900 ($176,300 per agent), while the city would have to shell out another $15,000 in pay and benefit raises to each of three agents who would be promoted to sergeant as part of the deal.

Response times up?

In 2008, police responded to serious emergencies, such as shootings, within three and a half minutes on average. Vermeer said response times to emergency calls may not be affected by the suggested cuts to police, but lower priority "service" calls, such as a report of a suspicious person, could suffer. Nick Galiotto, a former mayor and police officer, was concerned.

"If police officers have to 'take over' the numerous lower-threat tasks now performed by community service officers, their increased overall workload will probably mean longer response times to the community's calls for service," Galiotto said in an e-mail.

"The point of having a CSO is to reduce the necessity of a police officer handling certain calls for service, infractions and non-dangerous misdemeanors," Galiotto wrote. "For example, the recovery of an abandoned stolen vehicle can be processed by a CSO, thus not requiring the time of a highly trained police officer with powers of arrest at significantly higher cost."

The loss of three police agents also has its drawbacks, Galiotto pointed out.

"A police officer is frequently involved in incidents requiring supervisory assistance, such as application of technical arrest, search and/or impound laws. Having an agent on a shift allows an officer to obtain such assistance without waiting for the shift sergeant to complete some other assignment."

Positions on block

In total, the Police Department could lose 11 full-time positions and four part-time positions, including two full-time records specialists who man the front counter and help detectives search for records (saving $212,000), and three part-time assistants who handle things like sex offender registration, impound vehicle hearings, crime analysis and data entry (saving $135,000).

Compared to other city departments, the Police Department budget has grown disproportionately since 1991. The city's fire and police departments have added 21 employees since 1991, while the rest of the city government lost 37 employees.

According to a Police Department audit from February 2008, the city already pays less per capita for police services than Milpitas, Palo Alto and Redwood City, which are considered to be comparable local cities.

Police spokesperson Liz Wylie said morale in the department didn't appear to be down because of the suggested cuts.

"Quite a few people think that tier two won't ever be necessary," she said. "There are some people who are very worried. People named in tier two are pretty worried."

The City Council is expected to formally approve a 2009-10 budget on June 9, but the suggested cuts to police and fire — developed after months of discussions between Duggan and Vermeer — are viewed as a last resort and are not recommended at this time by city staff.

After the council budget hearing Tuesday, it appears there is about $1.5 million in tier two cuts that can be made before public safety will be affected. That may not be enough to fill a projected $4 million gap for 2010-11, unless new solutions are found. But officials say there aren't many such solutions in a city government that is already budgeted "lean," with few options for new revenue. ▀ fund so that about $1 million worth of services could be funded.

In a room full of city employees, some of whom spoke about the importance of their jobs as members of the SEIU, the council approved the elimination of 14 positions funded by the general fund, including one librarian position which will be funded until a librarian leaves voluntarily.

Though Macias said it would have "pretty negative effects," the council supported recommendations to eliminate an unfilled parks maintenance position, saving $94,000, which Macias said would be increasingly important as the city cuts contract maintenance for five mini-parks, saving $52,700.

To make some money, Macias proposed that non-residents pay $3 to use Shoreline Park. She said the fee could generate $300,000 a year, but the rest of the council did not support it. Duggan said staff would study the idea.

"Are people going to drive there if it is going to cost $3?" asked council member Mike Kasperzak.

Numerous unfilled administrative positions were cut, the kind "unseen" by the public in places like the library, finance department and employee services. That concerned Roberta Brown, a secretary in the building inspection department and one of several SEIU union members who spoke at the meeting.

"It takes all of us combined to keep the city running smoothly," she said.

In a series of straw votes, the council voted on a series of modifications to Duggan's proposals.

Duggan originally proposed that $4 million in cuts be made, which he called "tier one," while another $4 million in "tier two" cuts were recommended for next year. But the council decided to make some of the tier two cuts early, including a reduction in finance department staff.

The tier two cuts were made mostly so the council could fund a set of "council initiated items" that were not budgeted, including $120,000 for "positive activities for youth," $32,000 for mobile library services at Castro School, $15,000 for the Senior Advisory Task Force and $25,000 for the Police Activities League.

The council also needed to find another $20,000 after deciding that a new fee for youth sports leagues was too high. The council decided to charge only $1 per hour to youth sports leagues for field maintenance, rather than the recommended $2, which makes the city $20,000 instead of $40,000.

In a 4-3 vote, the council decided to cut $50,000 from the library collections budget, which is already lower than most cities, according to a study by the library board. Library director Karen Burnette said it would reduce the number of new periodicals, books and other media the library could buy.

The council had a serious discussion about making the city newsletter The View an online-only publication, saving $15,000, but opted against it after members said that older residents relied on it.

Though it wasn't recommended by city staff, the council found $150,000 by cutting in half the funding for a "succession planning" program used for training the city's future managers. Much of the city's current management is expected to retire in the next few years. ▀

"How do we increase density in a smart way so it doesn't create more problems?" asked one participant.

The answers included various public transit ideas, such as a Mountain View ferry terminal on the Bay, a light rail extension, new shuttle services and the use of a futuristic personal rapid transit system. But the solution which had widest support was to build housing, retail and other services in the neighborhood so office workers would not have to commute in and out of the area, which is currently dominated by offices. (There is one mobile home park on Space Park Way, which was represented by a handful of residents at the meeting.)

One participant said there should be "another vibrant Castro Street" in North Bayshore. Participants called for mixed-use development, with housing or offices above retail in certain areas. Some were concerned that housing needs could overwhelm a "finite" amount of space for offices.

"The time has come in Mountain View for higher-density to be a reality," said one participant, summarizing the thoughts of many at the meeting. The "low-rise tilt-ups" from the past are no longer economical because of rising land values, the person said.

Highway 101 gridlock was also a concern. One participant, a planner who has worked for NASA Ames, said the highway could add two lanes in each direction and still not provide enough "throughput" for large scale future development in the area.

One participant suggested an array of parking garages just off the freeway where people could park and take transit into the area, but the NASA planner scoffed at the idea, saying it wasn't a solution. "Highway 101 — that will be your parking lot."

The General Plan meeting was one of a series held in neighborhoods throughout the city. The last remaining meeting is for the "Moffett/Whisman Road Area" on Monday, June 8 at 6:30 p.m. at the German School, 310 Easy St. For more information, visit www.mountainview2030.com. ▀ from the get go.”

The Saturday night concert was the KISS FM Old School Fiesta, headlined by the 1970s band War. All of the victims, whose identities were not released, are male, and police gave their ages as 18, 25, 26, 32, 33 and 36. None of their injuries were life-threatening.

According to some reports, at 6:30 p.m. Saturday, Shoreline Amphitheatre security needed help breaking up some fights, and called on 14 Mountain View police officers who were patrolling the area outside the venue as usual. No arrests were made, but some concertgoers were asked to leave.

At 9:30 p.m. a larger fight broke out, stabbings began to occur and police were again called in. This time, 36 officers were called for backup from six local law enforcement agencies, including Palo Alto, Los Altos, Sunnyvale, Stanford, the Santa Clara County Sheriff's Office and the California Highway Patrol. Some wore riot gear.

Police were originally investigating three stabbings, but three other stabbing victims later came forward, including one who flagged down an ambulance that was leaving the amphitheatre and two who later walked into the hospital.

According to posts on the Voice's Town Square online forum, the fighting soured much of the evening.

“Around 7 p.m. the tension in the air suggested we put our shoes back on because the fact that we would have to run was becoming more evident,” wrote a Town Square user by the name of Melisarene.

“There were thousands and minutes before the concert was originally scheduled to end. After the stabbings began, amphitheatre staff reportedly turned up the lights but opted not to end the concert. The venue stopped serving alcohol at 8:30 p.m.

Creighton Burke, vice president of marketing for amphitheatre operator Live Nation, addressed the problems in a statement via e-mail.

“At Live Nation we take our responsibility to provide a safe and enjoyable concert environment for all of our patrons very seriously. Unfortunately on Saturday night a few irresponsible patrons caused isolated fights in which there were several injuries. We worked closely with local authorities to quickly get the situation under control.

No suspects have been arrested, the motive is unclear and the weapon or weapons are unknown. The victims have either been uncooperative or unable to provide information for an arrest, police said.

thousands of people on the lawn, families, children, pregnant women and quite a few who were looking for trouble,” the poster wrote. “After the first fight started and appeared to be getting under control, another bigger one was erupting and then another and so on. As we were quickly leaving, groups of scared people were running for their cars. Driving out we saw multiple police cars and an ambulance racing towards the mess — that was about 8 o'clock. I can't believe they didn't shut it down until 10:15 p.m.”

Amphitheatre staff shut down the concert at 10:15 p.m., after War finished playing and 15

While these types of incidents are rare, we continually monitor our security measures to ensure that concerts can be enjoyed safely by all and not disrupted by a few unruly patrons.”

trying to raise two children. Of course there were a few “stressors,” he said, but “it all turned out great.”

Nichols was born in Illinois and grew up in Burlingame. He got his BA from Stanford, where he met his wife Anita, then went to the University of California, Hastings College of the Law. He would go on to be a law professor at Lincoln Law School.

Nichols' first job was with the San Mateo Legal Aid Society during the “war on poverty.” He made $500 a month. He would go on to work on civil rights cases and once defended a man on death row.

“If you aspire to work for a big blue chip law firm you didn't get there by going to work for poverty law,” Nichols said, explaining his dedication to public service. “You didn't get there by doing civil rights work.”

When you are young, he added, “you do not immediately recognize the consequences of your decisions.”

Nichols remembers the date — Aug. 12, 1992 — when Paul Salisbury shot his way through security at family court with a .357 magnum with the intent of killing Judge Nichols, who he partly blamed for tearing apart his family. “I would have shot the judge if nothing else worked,” Salisbury reportedly told police after the shootout.

But Nichols didn't shrink away from his duties, and shortly after the shooting he took over a case from another judge who had been subjected to death threats.

Nichols has made controversial decisions from the bench over the years, but probably the most controversial came in late 1998, when he disbanded the Santa Clara County Grand Jury, claiming that five jurors had broken their oath to keep the jury's proceedings private. The jurors publicly criticized Nichols and pointed out that the jury's forewoman was a former court clerk for Nichols.

Stephen Smith, Nichols' bailiff of 20 years, said the time Nichols spent in family court proved he “had a heart for families.”

“He tried to keep everything above board,” Smith said. There was less “bickering” in his courtroom, he said, and he would make a special effort to settle cases before they went to trial.

“He was always affable, friendly to everyone.”

On Monday, Nichols was back in court for a month of pro-bono work presiding over civil cases. He expects to continue to serve as a retired judge in Chief Justice Ronald M. George's Assigned Judges Program, under which he would serve as a part-time judge without pay in order to save the county some money. ▣

COUNTY LAUNCHES E-WASTE COLLECTION PROGRAM

Santa Clara County officials are launching a new electronic waste program that allows local residents to drop off unwanted e-waste for free at various locations around the county.

E-waste, a term used to describe electronic products at the end of their useful life, includes used or broken computers, printers, laptops, used cell phones, televisions and VCRs.

The Silicon Valley Toxics Coalition and the National Safety Council estimate that there are about 500 million outdated computers nationwide, as well as 130 million cell phones that are disposed of annually. The program is an attempt to prevent the improper disposal of these items, which contain hazardous materials such as lead, mercury and cadmium, according to county officials.

The e-waste collection events will be scheduled once a month at various locations throughout the county. All events will be held from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. For the location of collection events in the county, visit [<http://www.hhw.org> www.hhw.org] or call (408) 299-7300.

Relay rallies cancer fighters

24-HOUR WALK AT CUESTA PARK FOCUSES ON STOPPING DREADED DISEASE

By Casey Weiss

As she walked a course around Cuesta Park last weekend, Mountain View resident Harriet Weiss' body was covered with stickers listing the names of family and friends who have been afflicted with cancer.

Weiss was one of about 1,000 residents who took over the park from Saturday, May 30 to Sunday, May 31, walking, singing along with bands and barbecuing as part of the seventh annual Relay for Life event, held to raise money in the fight against cancer.

The participants solicit patrons and form teams, and one person per team is always walking the course to reflect "the disease that never sleeps." Money raised goes to the American Cancer Society for awareness, research and prevention projects. The organization helps set up similar fundraisers around the country, and local residents joined millions of other Americans to fight the disease.

For her part, Weiss helped organize the team "L'chaim," which means "to life" in Hebrew.

"Too many people I know have cancer," she said.

The Mountain View Relay for Life had 47 teams in total and raised $115,000 this year. Organizers say they are still accepting donations through August. Fundraising is way up from last year, when 30 teams came out and raised $80,000.

Although the event is for anyone interested in fighting cancer, it kicked off with a lap just for cancer survivors. Later in the evening on Saturday, participants held a candlelight vigil for family and friends they have lost to the disease.

Shortly after they finished the "survivors lap," a group of El Camino patients took a break in the shade, where they had set up a booth and tent. The group of women, all cancer survivors who were treated at El Camino, said they meet regularly for a caregivers and survivors support group.

Some of these El Camino patients formed the relay group "Chemo Brains," and were out in force to support the fundraiser.

"We are all patients," explained Chemo Brains member and cancer survivor Jane Gibson as she watched participants walk by on the Cuesta course. ■

■ EDITORIAL THE OPINION OF THE VOICE

Better security needed at Shoreline Amphitheatre

Once again it has become necessary to ask whether more stringent security measures should be enforced at Shoreline Amphitheatre, the famed city-owned concert venue in the Bayshore area.

Luckily, no one was killed this time, although six people were stabbed. That was not the case in August 2005, when a young man was shot and killed at Old Middlefield Way and Rengstorff Avenue following a fight at Shoreline's KMEL Summer Jam concert.

Saturday's incidents apparently were sparked by a number of concertgoers who were not there for the music. Shoreline's own security is usually enough to control the sometimes-unruly crowds, but somehow the young men looking for trouble last Saturday got away from them.

The event was billed as the KISS FM Old School Fiesta, but the family-friendly evening envisioned by many patrons turned violent early on at around 6:30 p.m. and again at 9:30, when a much larger clash led to a call for help from Mountain View police.

Ultimately, 36 police officers from Palo Alto, Los Altos, Sunnyvale, Stanford, the county sheriff's office and the California Highway Patrol helped quell the violence. Unfortunately, the victims seem to have shared little information about who stabbed them, and as of this writing no suspects have been identified.

We believe it is time for the city to talk to Live Nation, the Shoreline operator, about stepping up security, especially at concerts that might attract miscreants like those who stole the show last Saturday. With its long history as a live music promoter, Live Nation should be second to none in making its concerts safe and secure.

The company is not doing so, however, a fact made clear by the gaps in knowledge police are encountering as they investigate the case. For example, at this time police still do not know if metal detectors were consistently used to check patrons at last week's concert. It seems that Shoreline implements different security levels depending on the concert. In this case, if metal detectors were used, they failed to locate the knives used in the stabbings.

Among other things, Shoreline's security personnel should be trained to identify gang colors and to be on the lookout for potential fights between rival gangs. Security inside the venue should be stepped up, and even the smallest incidents quashed immediately and those involved ejected. If Mountain View police had been stationed sooner inside the amphitheater, their presence might have discouraged the fighting.

Patrons of Shoreline Amphitheatre have a right to expect a safe and secure experience, especially at "family" events. Although most Shoreline concerts attain that goal, security failed miserably last Saturday. We think all Shoreline concertgoers would be willing to cooperate with increased security if it guarantees them a safe and comfortable experience at one of the Bay Area's best outdoor concert venues.

They failed to locate the knives used in the stabbings.

FONG MISSES THE POINT ON PROP 8 RULING

Editor:

I don't question the genuine feelings that Assembly member Paul Fong expresses in his letter about the California ruling on Proposition 8 ("Ruling on Prop 8 is disappointing," May 29). As one who voted for him, I think he could have been more helpful to all the people he represents if he would have clarified the facts about the legal ruling, rather than portraying it as a step in the wrong direction.

In this last case, the court was asked to invalidate Prop 8 because it claimed to be a constitutional revision rather than an amendment. A revision requires a two-thirds majority, while an amendment requires a simple majority. The court almost unanimously (6-1) said it was a legal amendment and should stand. They were not expressing their support of the content of Prop 8.

Mr. Fong's desire to fight for the principles of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people seems to exceed his desire to fight for the principles of democracy. California does often lead the nation, and I believe it is doing that right now by taking the road less traveled. I think thoughtful Californians are distinguishing between the fundamental violations of treating people of color as less than human versus the current desire to marry within the same sex. I wish Assembly member Fong shared the same perspective.

DEARTH OF RESTAURANTS IS RIGHT

Editor:

Daniel DeBolt's article was right on target, at least restaurant-wise ("City ranked as 4th-best," May 22). Mountain View has not had a decent "American" restaurant in years, one where a person or a family can order ham and eggs in the morning, soup and a sandwich at noon, and a Swiss steak dinner in the evening.

The last one to close was Ken's House of Pancakes on El Camino, when Ken Pruitt and his daughter Dana Wilson owned it. It wasn't on Castro Street, but it was in Mountain View. The last one on our main street was Mervyn's on the 200 block. Another three meals under one roof.

When I came to Mountain View some 66 years ago, there were about four or five American restaurants on Castro Street, and that does not include the three or four creameries that it had. Little by little they all disappeared and were never replaced. Now a person has to go out of town to find a three-meal place. If I were only 40 years younger.

Of course, our Eastern and Middle Eastern restaurants are probably as good as anywhere else.

LET DOGS INTO
ART FESTIVAL

Editor:

I was very disappointed recently when my dog, Cherry, and I were kicked out of the downtown Mountain View Art & Wine Festival.

We have been walking the downtown area on weekend mornings for a while. I thought, "How nice seeing the art and people would be," but we were told to leave, "Now!" So we went to a more dog-friendly art show in downtown Los Altos. Why is Mountain View so against dogs?

■ GUEST OPINION

Cuesta Tennis Center is poorly run, unfairly funded

By Diane Detig

I strongly disagree with the basis of the May 15 guest opinion concerning use of the Cuesta tennis courts and center ("Cuesta tennis courts should remain available to all").

The idea that Mountain View represents diversity is true in resident versus non-resident USTA participants. The article notes that in Sunnyvale, 85 percent of the teams are made up of non-residents, but the author forgets to mention that in Mountain View, the number is not that much lower at 70 percent.

Furthermore, there are restrictions for Mountain View residents at the Cuesta Tennis Center. Los Altos inter-club leagues which meet there restrict membership based on an individual's levels and do not give any priority to Mountain View residents. In fact, Mountain View residents are charged the same as non-Mountain View residents. Mountain View is subsidizing Los Altos residents who do not fund their own tennis center, nor does Los Altos allow residents to reserve public courts as cheaply as Mountain View.

Then consider that presidents of the Mountain View tennis club often are not city

Bay Area, and people from all over come here to captain and recruit non-residents.

The only special treatment granted to Mountain View residents is that we have the privilege of paying taxes to make Cuesta available to the entire Bay Area.

I try very hard to play in at Cuesta in past years and found that they were rarely supervised, even as young teenagers, making the center a chaotic place to be at best. It is often not open when posted and expected, and often the phones are unmanned. Some people pay, some get by free, depending on whether they are a part of the Cuesta friendship network. My sons were started as employees with W-2s but quickly were paid cash under the table for their work, even after we objected. So Mountain View's city-owned Cuesta Tennis Center treated legal Mountain View residents and employees illegally.

A city-run tennis center that follows normal business practices and is fair to its residents is of utmost important in my mind. The Cuesta Tennis Center, by contrast, is an embarrassment for Mountain View.

Diane Detig lives on Blue Lake Square.

residents. Look at the captains of the USTA teams. Currently about half are Mountain View residents. Most tennis players in the Valley know that Mountain View courts are available to all; the city gives no real priority to its residents. As a result, fielding a strong team is easy in Mountain View. You can recruit from the entire Mountain View, but have had to resort to Cupertino Sports Center, where I am treated fairly and can reserve and use courts at a cost of less than $1 per day. I do play on my home Mountain View courts more than twice a week but rarely at Cuesta, mainly because Cuesta is poorly run.

Hangar One Summit
may be our only hope

By Lenny Siegel

The Thursday, June 11 meeting of the Moffett Field Restoration Advisory Board may be our community's last best chance to prevent Hangar One from becoming a neglected skeleton when the Navy removes the contaminated siding and roof. Supporters of the hangar will be attending to remind federal agencies and our elected officials that we expect them to work together to find a way to save the historic structure.

Earlier this year, it appeared that the Navy and NASA's Ames Research Center, the current owner of the hangar, were about to negotiate a solution that would make the hangar water-tight while NASA sought a user for the decontaminated building. Now the Navy, with the blessing of the federal EPA, is making preparations to remove the Galbestos panels (containing lead, asbestos and PCBs) with no plan in place to re-cover the building. This will not only make the restoration task more expensive, but it will expose the hangar's frame to the elements indefinitely.

and ensure a seamless transition from removal action to active reuse with little or no time where the frame is left without siding or roof."

In January 2009, NASA Ames Deputy Director Lewis Braxton III told the RAB that NASA was negotiating with the Navy and private parties to find funding to restore the hangar. In exchange for a lump sum investment (from the Navy base closure cleanup budget) needed to make the hangar water-tight, NASA Ames would assume long-term management of all Navy-contaminated sites on its property.

But negotiations are not taking place, and the Navy is soliciting bids for skinning the hangar and other demolition activities. Hurt by the financial crisis, private parties are not rushing to invest or contribute. On May 11, the EPA approved the Navy's planned Removal Action — without restoration. The Navy plans to remove the siding and roof with no plan in place, let alone a coordinated reconstruction, to restore the building.

Negotiations are not taking place, and the Navy
is soliciting.

I therefore propose a Hangar One Summit, in which our Congressional delegation, the agencies and private parties involved at Moffett Field, and our local governments would discuss, in roundtable format, ways to piece together the resources necessary to save the Hangar. As I see it, no single use or source is likely to be the magic bullet that funds the re-covering of the hangar. It will be necessary to piece together a package from several sources. I cannot guarantee that such a summit would restore the hangar, but I fear that if such an effort is not made the hangar, a skeleton of its former self, will sit there, unused, for years.

The June 11 RAB meeting — at 7 p.m. in Building 943, just outside the Moffett Field main gate — provides us with an excellent opportunity to insist that all parties put their heads (and wallets) together to save Hangar One.

2008ENGINE BREAK-IN PROCEDURE

Some argue that "break in" procedures for new engines are relics of a bygone era, when engines were made less precisely and cylinder clearances were measured in thousandths of an inch rather than ten-thousandths of an inch. Still, a good argument can be made for drivers of new vehicles to observe a break-in period. For instance, during the first 600 to 1,200 miles that a new vehicle is driven, it should be subjected only to light duty so that the rings and cylinder walls have a chance to conform to one another. Typical engine break-in procedure involves allowing the engine to warm up sufficiently before driving at various speeds to utilize the full rev range.

Proper engine break-in will produce an engine that achieves maximum power output with the least amount of oil consumption due to the fact that the piston rings have seated properly to the cylinder wall. When the piston rings are broken in or seated, they do not allow combustion gases to escape the combustion chamber past the piston rings into the crankcase section of the engine. At Larry's AutoWorks, we ask you to bring in your car, truck or SUV at the first sign of a problem. To schedule an appointment to have your vehicle looked at call us. We're located at 101 Freeway on Leghorn between San Antonio and Rengstorff in Mountain View. Take the Rengstorff exit south, then right on Leghorn. We are an AAA approved facility. We also offer loner cars when you leave your car with us for repair!

HINT: Driving a brand-new engine hard at one continuous speed may result in an undesirable wear pattern where the piston rings meet the cylinder walls.

This makes it much less useful in my view. Google got much hype and good PR out of "providing" Mountain View with "free WiFi" when it was introduced. However, the reality has been so much less than the hype. Assessing how this experiment really worked on the ground is a good thing."

THE NODE KNOWS

AFTER NEARLY THREE YEARS OF PROVIDING FREE INTERNET IN MOUNTAIN VIEW, GOOGLE WIFI DRAWS MIXED REVIEWS

It's been almost three years since Google installed free WiFi Internet access across Mountain View's 12 square miles in a one-of-a-kind project for its hometown.

BY DANIEL DEBOLT

Today, some local Web surfers are happy being able to use the network in their homes and offices while others have been disappointed. And some said they would be willing to pay a small fee if reliability was improved.

Google spokesperson Andrew Pedersen says the company continues to add bandwidth in efforts to meet demand. The network launched in 2006 with 380 access points, called nodes, on city-owned light poles. Today, Pederson said, there are 500 of them, including some on private property.

Catch Katie on Ustream

MOUNTAIN VIEW COMPANY HAS HATCHED A DEAL WITH CBS NEWS

By Angela Hey

What does an Army officer think about while serving in Iraq? John Ham wondered how he could send live videos to his friends and family back home.

Later, with fellow West Point graduate Brad Hunstable and technologist Gyula Feher, he delved into the details of creating an Internet movie network. With just $14 million in funding, from investors that include the Band of Angels and Doll Capital, they started Ustream.

This still-small company has come a long way: On Monday, Ustream and CBS News announced a partnership allowing the media giant to simulcast “CBS Evening News with Katie Couric” online. This means, among other things, that online news-watchers can catch Katie at 3:30 p.m. every day instead of at 5:30.

Because Ham loves Mountain View’s vibrant downtown, with its no-fast-food environment, Ustream (www.ustream.tv) is located above Meyer Appliance on Castro Street. The company has a tight small team of 35 employees, including 20 in Europe.

Ustream enables anyone with a Web-connected video camera to create an Internet TV show. For popular shows like the Presidential Inauguration, Ustream can make up to 10 million copies of the video stream. It can also scale the video for large or small viewing screens.

Ustream is most useful for presenting live events, like Stanford University’s Social Data Revolution class that discusses how to use data created by users. Ustreamers include media personalities, such as actor Ashton Kutcher, the first Twitter user to reach a million followers. High schools can broadcast sports games. ObamaForAmerica used Ustream’s service as part of its election campaign, and as reported in last July’s Voice, MoveAmericaForward.org used Ustream for a benefit for the troops.

Ustream uses Adobe’s Flash technology. As Flash is not included with an iPhone, users can download a Ustream app from the iTunes store. In July, a new iPhone is widely expected to support video capture, a feature already available on many other phones.

You can also view Ustream shows on Nokia’s S60 series phones. Not all shows work — it depends on the video format. (Last April in my Hey Tech! blog, I mentioned Qik (www.qik.com), which focuses on mobile video streaming. It supports many more phones than Ustream.)

Besides live videos, Ustream lets users create shows from stored videos and pictures. For example, you might store videos on YouTube of your child’s activities, then edit them into a weekly show for their school friends and family. You can follow Ustreamers that you like and they can follow you.

Quality content is the key to a successful show. For individuals, Pinnacle Studio, from Mountain View’s Pinnacle Systems (an Avid subsidiary), is a great way to make compelling videos. For companies, Mountain View is home to several makers of corporate videos, including Transvideo Studios (with new venture PictureLab), Penrose Productions and Creation Ground Media.

Internet video shows, from sites like ustream.tv, hulu.com and fora.tv, are rapidly becoming an alternative to traditional TV as broadband networks get faster. In many locations — where users don’t want to pay for cable and poor reception means that over-the-air digital TV broadcasts break up into little squares — Internet video is an important entertainment option.

Ustream shows, like TV programs, may show a 15 to 30 second pre-roll advert. Ustream determines how long videos stay on its server. You can pay Ustream to store your videos for later viewing, but YouTube can also do this and reach a

For organizations that prefer to have their own video service, Ustream offers Watershed, a platform for live, interactive video. Audiences can vote and interact with programs. Pricing starts at $49/month for 500 viewer hours. Alternatively, Pay as You Go pricing starts at $1 per viewer hour, with volume discounts.

Video is becoming essential to promoting any business and creating a personal online brand. So check out Ustream — with it, you too can become a broadcaster and TV producer. ■

Despite the increased bandwidth, many readers on the Voice's Town Square forum spoke of connection problems, and some said they abandoned it altogether due to lack of reliability. No criticism was too harsh, however, as the service is free.

User growth appears to be petering out. The network's once-rapid growth of 10 percent more users a month after its August 2006 debut has slowed to less than 1 percent a month since August 2007. There are now 16,000 "unique users" per month, Pedersen said, up from 15,000 in August 2007.

For those who haven't spent about $100 to install a signal amplifier in their home or office, Google WiFi works best as an outdoor network that can be used in parks, on the street and in the library and City Hall. Trees and walls can block access inside buildings — even with a signal amplifier — while dense neighborhoods have seen slower connections during peak evening hours as Web traffic logjams at the local node.

Pedersen says an increasing variety — 180 different kinds — of devices have accessed the network, including iPhones and other cell phones, WiFi routers and laptops.

Google maintains a WiFi help forum at wifi.google.com. An anonymous Google employee who posts under the name Wifi4-all@gmail.com posts network updates and helps people with problems. This person says that Google's light pole-mounted one-watt radios have plenty of power, and that in general, the problem is that typical WiFi enabled laptops and phones put out 200 times less power than the radios do. The Web site lists several routers that can be purchased to help devices access WiFi indoors, along with information on making a secure connection.

Pedersen says residents can still request a node in underserved areas, especially if a city-owned light pole is near. Some homeowners have had them installed on their homes.

The network initially cost Google an estimated $1 million, and the company pays the city $36 a year for each pole used by its nodes. A team of Google employees constantly works to maintain the network.

Prompted by a question on Town Square, Mountain View residents have shared their own experiences using Google's free WiFi network. (See some of their comments on page 15.) The entire thread can be viewed at www.mv-voice.com/square/index.php?d=&t=1128&i=3. ▣

SURVEY SHOWS CALIFORNIA UNEMPLOYMENT AT 11 PERCENT IN APRIL

California's unemployment rate held relatively steady at 11 percent last month, according to a federal survey.

The same survey of 5,500 households estimated the state's unemployment rate as 11.2 percent in March, according to the California Employment Development Department.

A larger and less variable survey of 42,000 businesses in California showed the total number of non-farm jobs decreased by 63,700 in April, the EDD said.

Nationwide unemployment in April rose to 8.9 percent.

In the Bay Area, non-seasonally adjusted figures showed Santa Clara County had the highest unemployment rate in April, at 10.8 percent, followed by Solano County at 10.5 percent and Alameda County at 10.3 percent.

San Francisco's unemployment rate was 8.8 percent in April; Marin County had the lowest jobless rate in the Bay Area at 7.2 percent.

OWNER OF RICK'S RATHER RICH ICE CREAM IN PALO ALTO SAYS IT'S A COOL LABOR OF LOVE

By Dale F. Bentson

“The only emperor is the emperor of ice cream,” poet Wallace Stevens once wrote. I don't know if Rick's Rather Rich Ice Cream owner Gary Schoen is a Stevens aficionado, but both men certainly took circuitous routes before settling into their preferred metiers.

Stevens was an insurance-company executive before (and after) poetic fame. Schoen completed stints at Montgomery Ward and Kelly-Moore Paints and worked for a paint-distribution company and in human resources in the high-tech world.

Schoen's grandfather owned a dairy ranch along the Snake River in Idaho where his mother grew up. During high school in Arizona, Schoen worked in an ice cream store and told his school counselor that he loved the ice cream business so much, he wanted to own his own store someday.

By 2001, he'd been someone else's employee long enough and decided to open his own ice cream parlor. He enrolled in ice cream-making school in North Carolina, under the tutelage of frozen-dessert specialist Luciano Ferrari.

Shortly thereafter, the stars

It is in this spirit that we will be sharing some of our classic recipes with you each week.

Cotolette alla Bolognese

- 4 veal cutlets, 6 oz. each
- 4 thin slices of fresh pecorino or provolone
- 4 slices prosciutto
- 1/2 cup unsalted butter
- 2 eggs, beaten
- 1/2 cup finely ground breadcrumbs
- 1 jar good quality tomato sauce, heated
- Salt
- Freshly ground pepper
- A little butter for the baking dish

Preparation:

Preheat your oven to 350 F

Pound the cutlets flat, trim away any fat, and remove any membrane. Salt and pepper the meat to taste, dip it in the beaten egg, and dredge it in the bread crumbs, pressing down to make sure the crumbs adhere.

Melt butter in a large skillet, and when it begins to bubble. Fry the cutlets until golden, turning them once. Transfer them to a buttered baking dish, lay a slice of prosciutto and one of cheese slices on each piece, and bake for 10 minutes or until the cheese melts. Spoon a warm tomato sauce over each and serve with crusty bread.

aligned and Rick's Rather Rich Ice Cream, a Palo Alto fixture for a half-century, became available. Schoen and his wife Andrea moved quickly to seal the deal.

Schoen inherited about 100 recipes with the keys to the front door. He pulled out all the old equipment and installed modern, efficient machines, reconfigured the space and repositioned the ice cream store as a 1940s-styled soda fountain.

Despite gelato being all the rage, Schoen chose to continue with ice cream.

"I learned how to make both gelato and ice cream in North Carolina. I just like ice cream better, and I think our customers agree."

Recently, the store was expanded, with seating added (for 26 people). It retains its nostalgic decor, but ice cream is no longer made in the store, as it was in the early days. Today it's made in a plant about a mile down the road; Rick's makes its own ice cream, yogurt, sorbets, fudge, frozen cupcakes and ice cream pies and cakes.

Over the years, the recipe folder has grown with the business and now numbers in the hundreds. Schoen and ice cream maker David Williams dream up new and unusual flavors weekly.

Schoen said Rick's ice cream is made in tiny five-gallon batches to ensure quality. Butterfat content is 16 percent (yogurt flavors have 0 percent fat), in line with other top-notch brands, but with a handmade approach. Each batch takes time and precision and is labor-intensive.

Schoen said he logs hundreds of miles per year seeking essences and extracts he cannot get through normal channels. His palette includes saffron from Spain, rose syrup from India, and gata (frozen coconut liquids and extracts from the Philippines). As frozen fruit doesn't have much scent, extracts are added to the fruit to perk up the olfactory senses; taste, texture and visual appeal are inherently present.

Besides the vast repertoire of such old standards as caramel praline, vanilla bean, rocky road and mocha almond fudge, many of Schoen's flavors are exotic and dreamy: saffron pistachio, lemon lavender, white-chocolate ginger, and rose.

The "Sideways" flavor, inspired by the movie, is a wine-infused ice cream made with cabernet sauvignon. The movie touted pinot noir as the king of wines; poetic license has been granted. "We tried pinot noir, but it didn't have enough flavor," Schoen said.

There are plenty of kids' flavors at Rick's — such as blue moon, bubblegum, cotton candy and frosted cake — with wild, iridescent colors and unlikely taste combinations. Kids do adore those little gut-bomb flavors.

Rick's best-sellers these days, though, are cookies and dough (not to be confused with cookie dough, but cookies and dough), industrial chocolate (a very chocolatey affair), and coffee molasses chip, which is downright addictive. Seasonal flavors include pumpkin, peppermint chip, mint chocolate chip and eggnog.

"I bought a box of Girl Scout cookies a couple years ago and decided to mix the cookies with ice cream," Schoen said. "It was good, and I quickly sold out. This year, I bought 170 boxes to make into thin-mint ice cream."

One Girl Scout mother phoned him for an order. Schoen refused and suggested the girl come in herself. "After all, there's more to it than just meeting a quota. It's supposed to build character and skills for the girl," he said.

Rick's new sit-down parlor gives customers a chance to relax with sodas, extra-thick shakes, banana splits and black cows — in addition to the ice cream pies, cakes and frozen cupcakes. On a busy day, Rick's easily serves 500 patrons, Schoen estimated.

Expanding to a second location is not in the cards, he said. Instead, he's beginning to whole-sale Rick's products locally. At this point in his life he stresses "manageability over expansion."

Gary and Andrea have three children and three grandchildren. One son is in the video-games industry. (Talk about grandchild nirvana: His dad designs video games and Grandpa owns an ice cream store. Think that kid's popular at school?)

For Schoen, making ice cream is a labor of love. "I wish I had done this a lot earlier in life. I love it. It's a feel-good business. We put smiles on people's faces." ■

MOVIE REVIEWS

ANGELS AND DEMONS ★★1/2

(Century 16, Century 20) Tom Hanks reprises his role as ace Harvard symbolologist Robert Langdon, whose knowledge of ancient Catholic history makes him ideally suited to the latest Vatican conflict. Then the narrative kicks off a roundelay of hidden catacombs and medieval codes. Not to mention anxious cardinals in the throes of Conclave, a perky Pope's assistant (Ewan McGregor) and the conventional Swiss Guard led by Commander Richter (Stellan Skarsgard). Director Ron Howard does not disappoint when it comes to popcorn thrills: frenetic chases, explosions and nine-lives scenarios that make for head-scratching contingencies. Not surprisingly, the plot is a one-dimensional affair loaded with commonplace distractions that never catch fire the way Dan Brown's prose did on the page. Rated: PG-13 for violence, bloodshed and mature themes. 2 hours, 20 minutes. — J.A. (Reviewed)

NIGHT AT THE MUSEUM: BATTLE OF THE SMITHSONIAN ★★

(Century 16, Century 20) The sequel to the 2006 hit "Night at the Museum" begins with a cursory change: Museum of Natural History night guard Larry Daley (Ben Stiller) quit his job and got rich selling his products on late-night infomercials. Upon visiting his old stomping grounds, Larry learns from museum director Dr. McPhee (Ricky Gervais) that the old exhibits are being shipped to storage in Washington, D.C., to make way for interactive holographic replacements. The venue change to the Smithsonian provides the novelty as Larry tries to protect his friends from evil, lispng pharaoh Kahmunrah (Hank Azaria). The Smithsonian gives Levy a new set of toys, including spunky Amelia Earhart (Amy Adams), the Lincoln Memorial and Rodin's "The Thinker" (both voiced by "Simpsons" vet Azaria), Archie Bunker's chair and "American Gothic." The story feels mechanically engineered for special effect after special effect, all of them derivations of ideas we've seen before. But like its predecessor, the movie has a trump card: It's a kid-friendly, PG film that celebrates museums. Rated PG for mild action and brief language. One hour, 45 minutes. — P.C.

TERMINATOR SALVATION ★★

(Century 16, Century 20) What began in 1984 with director James Cameron's creative and compelling actioner that introduced the world to Arnold Schwarzenegger has devolved into a generic science-fiction franchise rich in style but bereft of soul. It's 2018, and the war-torn future

Sarah Connor aggressively tried to alter has come to pass. Sarah's son John (Bale) is now a key member of humankind's resistance against Skynet and its army of killer machines. The Resistance finds an unusual ally in former death-row inmate Marcus Wright (Sam Worthington), a Skynet-developed cyborg who refuses to relinquish his humanity. Wright teams with teenager Kyle Reese (Anton Yelchin), the young man destined to become John Connor's father, and deaf adolescent Star (newcomer Jadagrace) as machines blast away with impunity. Rated: PG-13 for intense sequences of sci-fi violence and action and language. 2 hours, 10 minutes. — T.H. (Reviewed)

UP★★★★

(Century 16, Century 20) Senior citizen Carl Fredricksen (voice of Edward Asner) wasn't always the gruff, standoffish man passersby perceive him to be. He was a wide-eyed boy eager for adventure. He was a loyal husband who shared a lifelong love with his wife, Ellie. He was happy. Following Ellie's death, Carl settled into the couple's colorful home while tractors and dumptrucks demolished the familiar neighborhood around him. Now Carl sits on his porch with a grunt, and even exuberant young wilderness explorer Russell (voice of Jordan Nagai) can't lift him from his consistently somber mood. When the threat of being placed in a nursing home confronts Carl, he decides to do something drastic. He attaches myriad vibrant balloons to the house's chimney and sets off for Paradise Falls, a secluded and mysterious locale in South America that Ellie longed to visit. When Carl realizes he has an accidental stowaway in Russell, his plans for a quiet escape are thrown askew. Hilarious, heartwarming and beautifully animated, "Up" is one of the year's first truly exceptional films. Rated: PG for some peril and action. 1 hour, 36 minutes. — T.H.

X-MEN ORIGINS: WOLVERINE ★★★

(Century 16, Century 20) The story focuses on the relationship between brothers Wolverine (aka Logan) and Sabretooth (aka Victor Creed), from their adolescence to wartime heroics to involvement in the controversial Weapon X program. After being sacrificed to a firing squad, Wolverine and Sabretooth are approached by General William Stryker (Danny Huston). Stryker convinces the men to join a team of tough mutants that includes sharpshooter Agent Zero (Daniel Henney), brawler Fred Dukes (Kevin Durand) and mercenary Wade Wilson (Ryan Reynolds). It turns out Stryker has sinister intentions and Wolverine is fortunate to survive the adamantium infusion. As Wolverine tries to dismantle Stryker's nefarious program, he turns to fellow mutants for help. Overall, the movie is not unlike the character himself: rough but memorable. Rated: PG-13 for violence, intense sequences of action and some partial nudity. 1 hour, 47 minutes. — T.H.
