Peninsula to elect new state senator

By Gennady Sheyner

To the average Peninsula voter, Brisbane and Sunnyvale have little in common. The former is a small, industrial suburb on San Francisco's doorstep, the latter a high-tech hub in the heart of Silicon Valley.

But to Assemblyman Jerry Hill, the two municipalities are facing many of the same issues, from concerns over Caltrain's survival and high-tech jobs to open-space preservation and airport noise.

Hill, whose 19th district includes most of San Mateo County (including Brisbane), is the frontrunner in a four-way race to replace the termed-out state Sen. Joe Simitian, D-Palo Alto, in the newly redrawn District 13.

If Hill wins, his constituency would encapsulate much of his existing district in San Mateo County and the northern part of Santa Clara County, including Palo Alto and Mountain View.

Hill's most formidable opponent, Mountain View's Sally Lieber, is approaching the race from the other side, both geographically and politically. While Hill touts his ability to find the middle ground and get along with a wide spectrum of constituents (his website includes a list of roughly 400 endorsements), Lieber embraces her image as a firebrand who fights for the needy and the disenfranchised.

"I've never been the favored candidate of the powers that be," she proudly proclaimed at a recent interview.

Three elected officials vie for 5th District supervisor seat

CHANG, WANG HAVE EXPERIENCE, BUT SIMITIAN'S THE 800-POUND GORILLA

By Chris Kenrick

California State Sen. Joe Simitian is the 800-pound gorilla in this November's three-way race to represent northern Santa Clara County on the Board of Supervisors.

The two other candidates for the board's 5th District seat — two-time Cupertino Mayor Kris Huyilan Wang and Cupertino City Councilman Barry Chang — also have credible records in local elected office.

But neither Chang nor Wang approaches the widespread name recognition enjoyed by the 59-year-old Simitian, gained over three decades in elected office, beginning with the Palo Alto Board of Education and moving through the Palo Alto City Council, county Board of Supervisors, California Assembly and California Senate.

Termed out of the Senate this year, Simitian is circling back to seek for the second time a seat on the county board, where current Supervisor Liz Kniss will be termed out and is herself circling back to vie for a spot on the Palo Alto City Council.

Such are the effects of term limits on the local political landscape.

A run for Congress would be a logical next step for Simitian, but Congresswoman Anna Eshoo, a close friend of Simitian's first elected to Congress in 1992, announced in August she will seek re-election this year. Congress is not subject to term limits, which were imposed on the state Legislature by California voters in 1990.

Chang, who holds a master's in civil engineering from the University of Cincinnati, is a Realtor. He was elected to the Cupertino Union School District Board of Education in 1995 and re-elected in 1999. He served four years on the Cupertino Public Safety Commission and was elected to the City Council in 2009.

His long-running, outspoken crusade against the 73-year-old Lehigh Permanente quarry and cement plant led to a public chastising by County Executive Jeffrey Smith last spring over his behavior at two public meetings.

School district seeks $198 million bond

By Nick Veronin

Officials with the local elementary and middle school district are asking voters to approve a $198 million bond measure to modernize and improve school facilities and safety infrastructure.

The proposed bond, which will appear on the June 5 ballot, would be supported by area home owners who would pay up to $30 per $100,000 of assessed property value for 25 years. It requires a yes vote of 55 percent to pass. It would come on top of Measure C, the eight-year, $3 million voter-approved parcel tax that went into effect in 2009. Depending on parcel size, property owners are assessed anywhere from nearly $150 to over $1,000 a year under Measure C.

Money generated by the passage of the bond cannot be used for teacher or administrator salaries.

Proponents of Measure G say the Mountain View Whisman School District needs the money to pay for an array of projects at all nine of its campuses — including major structural repairs, safety and accessibility improvements, technological upgrades, and the construction of new, energy efficient classrooms, along with the removal of permanent and portable structures past their prime.

Opponents of the bond claim that the district should have sought more community input and overlooked simpler, more cost-effective solutions.

The district's student population is projected to swell to as many as 5,500 children over the next five years, according to Fiona Walter, a district trustee. In order to accommodate that growth, she said, the district will have to build more classrooms, purchase new equipment and, in all likelihood, reopen the Whisman campus. All of that will take money, Walter said. "We need to be proactive and have the money in hand."

Beyond being prepared for an influx of students, Walter noted that an overhaul of some of the district's older buildings and facilities is in order. "With 50- to 60-year-old buildings, the majority of maintenance requirements can't be covered by our annual budget," she said.

There are some multipurpose rooms in the district that don't meet current seismic codes, and there are fire alarm systems that aren't connected to one another and don't communicate directly with the fire department.

While Mountain View residents Steve Nelson and Alan J. Keith say they are all for ensuring the future prosperity of local schools, they take issue with much of

Measure G

Measure G. Both Nelson and Keith signed the "Arguments Against Measure G" in the Santa Clara County voter guide.

Nelson and Keith charge that district officials have failed to present the community with a detailed vision for how the money will be spent and that the board of trustees, along with district administrators, did not secure adequate public input before placing the bond proposal on the ballot.

Nelson said he was particularly concerned with what he referred to as a "laundry list" of projects under the district's Student Facility Improvement Plan, which outlines everything district officials believe their schools need. Although the plan (or "Master Plan" as it is alternately called) sorts projects into three priority levels, Nelson dislikes that it does not organize each pher Chiang, a reform-minded schoolteacher from Mountain View, and John Webster, a libertarian crusading against what he calls the “darker side of democracy.” Each is running on a shoestring budget of about $1,000 and is concerned as much with shifting the conversation as winning the race.

Hill was born in San Francisco and learned the political ropes in San Mateo County, where he followed the traditional trajectory from community leader to councilman to assemblyman. His three opponents are all from Mountain View, a city that until now had been represented by Democrat Elaine Alquist.

With San Mateo County claiming the lion’s share of the new District 13, each is at a geographical disadvantage against Hill, though Lieber said she has been heartened by the name recognition she enjoys throughout the district.

While Hill and Lieber are Democrats with strong environmentalist credentials, they also have profound differences. His record includes bills supporting green technology, strengthening consumer protection, and beefing up regulation for utilities. She has focused on social services and protection for the disenfranchised, whether pregnant convicts or the homeless.

If elected, the former assemblywoman from Mountain View said one of her first legislative proposals would be a bill that would increase the amount of food allotted to pregnant convicts in state prisons.

Endorsements

Though Hill stresses his roots as a community leader and a small-business owner, in this race he is in many ways the establishment’s choice. His endorsement list includes a legion of mayors and council members, the Association of California State Supervisors, the San Jose Silicon Valley Chamber of Commerce and the California Labor Federation.

He has received contributions from a wide array of pharmaceutical, biotech and health care companies, including Genentech, Eli Lilly and the California Association of Health Facilities.

While Lieber said she would never seek an endorsement from pharmaceutical lobbyists, Hill touts his long list of supporters as proof of his ability to find the middle ground.

He also rejects any implication that money could sway his votes. The prime example for him is PG&E, which in the past has contributed to his campaign. That hasn’t kept Hill from becoming one of the company’s toughest critics in the Legislature, especially with respect to issues around the San Bruno gas pipeline explosion of Sept. 9, 2010.

Hill’s endorsements and accomplishments don’t faze Lieber, who relishes her familiar role as an underdog. While Hill’s campaign has been outspending Lieber’s, according to campaign-finance records, she still has about $200,000 in the bank, compared to $150,000 in Hill’s campaign chest.

In addition to the $100,000 Lieber pumped into her own campaign, she has received contributions from an assortment of attorneys, retirees and environmentalists from both San Mateo and Santa Clara counties.

She vowed in a recent interview that if elected, she would continue to look out for the state’s most needy residents, including convicts and the homeless. As part of “experiential politics” she practiced as an assemblywoman, Lieber once spent three days on the streets of San Jose with a little bag containing two dollars in change.

“It only took two hours for me to turn into a human pigeon,” she said. “No one saw me. I felt I shouldn’t go into places.”

Among her proud achievements as an assemblywoman was convincing then-Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger to scrap a proposal to shutter cold-weather shelters.

She said one of her goals, if elected, would be to protect social services from major cuts and to seek more contributions from corporations in resolving the state’s fiscal crisis.

“Unfortunately, the legislation has tended to pick the low-hanging fruit — to take from those who don’t have great representation in the Capitol and to take by and large from low-income children and from education rather than asking our major corporations to step up and to do a little bit more,” Lieber said.

High-speed rail

For all their differences, the two leading candidates expressed similar concerns about California’s proposed high-speed rail system. Each has stressed the need to upgrade Caltrain.

Hill said he plans to introduce a bill that would allow the Peninsula Corridor Joint Powers Board, which oversees Caltrain, to pursue a ballot measure that would fund the popular but cash-strapped commuter service. It would be up to Caltrain officials to determine when to pursue a ballot measure, which would most likely entail a sales-tax increase.

On high-speed rail, he said he wants to see the California High-Speed Rail Authority address major concerns before he could fully support the project. Among them: The authority has to offer an assurance that a two-track “blended system” of high-speed rail and Caltrain is the only design option that would move forward (as opposed to the locally unpopular four-track design); and that the rail authority lay out a “better pathway” toward acquiring the $68.5 billion needed to pay for the system.

“I’ve been extremely critical (of the high-speed-rail project) and I will continue to be so,” he said. “But I do appreciate the governor’s new appointments and the direction the authority is going. There’s no bait-and-switch here.”

Lieber said she is interested in exploring ways to use regional train funds that are part of the high-speed-rail project to improve Caltrain from San Francisco to Gilroy (a recent regional agreement between the California High-Speed Rail Authority and the Metropolitan Transportation Commission only commits to electrifying the Caltrain corridor between San Francisco and San Jose).

“I’d like to see a fully electrified system so that we don’t have diesel trains in the heart of Silicon Valley,” she said.

From Lieber’s perspective, one difference between her and Hill is the way each is campaigning. She said she is pursuing a “grassroots strategy of reaching out directly to the voters.” She pointed to Hill’s endorsements from the pharmaceutical industry and said the endorsement is not one she would seek to get.

“My competitor is getting a lot of the business support,” she said. “I’m not seeking to get endorsed by any lobbying organization.”

Other candidates

While Hill and Lieber can point to their extensive legislative records, Christopher Chiang is new to politics. As if to underscore that fact, he is full of compliments when he talks about the two front-runners in the race. In fact, he said, he would be happy to vote for Hill or Lieber if they showed a commitment to education reform.

Chiang, a 31-year-old teacher at Mountain View High School, can speak extensively about education policy. He supports raising the training requirements for teachers and getting away from the existing policy of measuring students’ reading and math skills in favor of a more “holistic” testing for students. He also said he wants to end Sacramento’s “micromanagement” of education policies and to give teachers more power to set classroom agendas.

Chiang said he would pay for education investments in part by cutting costly services for adults. He said he supports Gov. Jerry Brown’s effort to cut employee pensions. He also supports the governor’s cuts to social services and advocates keeping these cuts in place even when the state economy rebounds.

Even popular proposals like electrifying Caltrain should take a backseat to improving education for California’s children, he said.

The other candidate, John Webster, also opposes high-speed-rail spending but for a completely different reason. He is a libertarian who has sought a state office (unsuccessfully) several times in the past.

He describes himself on his website as an “avid nudist” and argued in a recent interview that government needs to start treating its citizens more like customers. This means making sure that citizens pay for whatever services they receive from the government, even if it means charging “token tuition” in public schools. Major projects such as high-speed rail, from his point of view, should be left to the private market.

“You don’t want a bunch of people getting free benefits and someone else getting charged for it,” said Webster, a self-employed software engineer.

Among his more unconventional proposals is pushing for California to threaten succession from the United States.

“Even if I’m not elected, if I get the argument out there, the Congress will start taking things seriously and then decide to do something,” he said.

The four-candidate pool will be winnowed down to two in June 5 election, when California holds its primaries. The top two vote-getters will then square off in the general election on Nov. 6. ■

Voters will have a chance to learn more about the District 13 candidates in the June 5 primary at a forum sponsored by the League of Women Voters. The event will be held Friday, May 18, from 7 to 9:30 p.m. at the Cupertino Community Hall, 10350 Torre Ave. in Cupertino.

Wang, who has a background in statistics, computer science and business, worked for local companies HP, Sun Microsystems, Visa and Portal Software before entering public service around 2003.

She was elected to the Cupertino City Council in 2003 and re-elected in 2007 and has served on an array of commissions, including the Santa Clara County Parks & Recreation Commission, the Santa Clara County Recycling Waste & Reduction Commission, the Santa Clara County Cities

Association and the Environmental Quality Policy Committee of the League of California Cities. She has been an office-holder in several of those groups.

In late-March filings with the California Fair Political Practices Commission, Chang’s campaign showed an ending balance of $11,748; Wang’s campaign had an ending balance of $50,000 and Simitian’s campaign had an ending balance of $108,489.

Chang did not return email and phone requests for an interview, and Wang said she was unavailable because of an out-of-town trip.

In a phone interview Monday, Simitian noted the county is significantly worse off financially than it was when he previously served on the Board of Supervisors, from 1997 to 2000.

The biggest issues on the horizon for counties, he said, will be health care reform and the planned closure of state juvenile justice facilities and transfer of funding and supervision responsibilities to the county level.

“We’re moving a lot of things back to local government in the probation and incarceration world, both as a way to do the job less expensively and hopefully do a better job,” he said.

“The state record on recidivism is nothing to be proud of, and there’s a lot of evidence that good programs at the local level can outperform what gets done at the state level.

“It means all the probation offices are going to have to be working in top form and there will be changes in the county jail. It also means the county will have to step up for programs for folks trying to re-enter the community, and get that job done.”

Because the north county communities generally are more prosperous than other areas, part of the job is making the case for services here, Simitian said, recalling that in his previous supervisorial stint, his colleague Blanca Alvarado had 45 percent of the county’s welfare population while he had just 4.5 percent.

Simitian, a lawyer, said if elected, he’d look forward to being able to live at home and leave the Sacramento policymaking world for the day-to-day operations of government and delivery of services. ■ individual project from highest priority to lowest.

Nelson and Keith argue that district officials should have been able to organize the 51 projects in order of importance and they should have also provided a timeline for the completion of each. Without it, Nelson said, the project is likely to proceed inefficiently.

Walter said that if district officials were to make such specific promises they would inevitably have their “hands tied” further down the road. Running a district is complicated and contingent on unforeseeable factors, she said. “A little bit of flexibility goes a long way.”

Because the total estimated cost of all the projects on the improvement plan is more than $400 million, Nelson wondered whether the district would simply come back with another bond measure once it had spent the $198 million.

Because the current list of Measure G will ultimately be whittled down (should the bond pass), Walter said the public can rest assured that the board of trustees will not come back asking for more money.

“That is not part of the plans,” she said. “We have no intention of going back to the community any time in the near future.”

All of Measure G’s shortcomings, Nelson told the Voice, can be traced back to the fact that the district did not hold what is commonly referred to as a “7-11 committee” — a committee of seven to 11 community members that could inform district officials which projects should be completed first.

“We’re not against financing the improvement of schools,” Keith said. “We want the superintendent and the district to tell us what projects they are going to do and the timeline. They don’t seem to be willing to do that.”

Walter explained that the projects listed in the SFIP are simply a “wish list” — a compilation of all the things district officials would like to see happen for the schools. Should the measure pass, a community bond oversight committee (similar to Nelson’s 7-11 committee) would be formed, Walker said. “We can’t legally apply a 7-11 committee to this situation,” Walter said.

The measure has the support of many local elected officials — including state Sen. Joe Simitian, Mountain View Mayor Mike Kasperzak, city council members and, of course, the district board of trustees. Prominent community members, teachers and local school principals have also publicly expressed support for the bond. A December 2011 phone poll commissioned by the district showed Measure G with well about the 55 percent support it needs to pass.

The student population is projected to swell to as many as 5,500 children over the next five years.

That survey, conducted by Gene Bregman & Associates, found that more than 60 percent of local voters felt that the district had at least some need for more money.

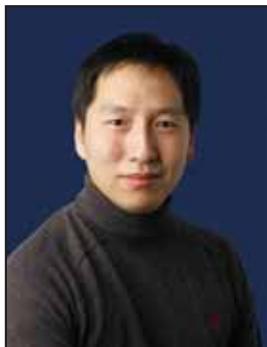

The survey also reported that a majority of those polled would support the proposed bond.

Nelson acknowledges that he has taken up a “minority position” in his battle against Measure G. Nevertheless, he and Keith said they hope voters will reject the bond when they head to the polls next month.

“I just think the money could be better spent,” Keith said.

Superintendent Craig Goldman said he is confident that a majority of Mountain View residents do not share that view.

“We believe community members will understand that we need to maintain our facilities,” Goldman said. “As a district it is important that we be proactive in the management of our facilities and planning for the future needs of the district. It’s essential that our schools are able to grow with Mountain View. We believe that our strong schools are part of a formula that makes Mountain View great and ensures a strong local economy.” ■

Three challenge Rich Gordon in state Assembly race

By Renee Batti

As Rich Gordon, D-Menlo Park, asks District 24 residents to send him back to the state Assembly for another two years, three challengers with no experience in elective politics are telling voters they can do a better job representing their interests in Sacramento.

It’s a near certainty that Gordon, a first-term incumbent assemblyman and former three-term San Mateo County supervisor with wide name recognition, will be the top vote-getter in the June primary. But even so, under California’s open primary rules, one of the three challengers will also win a spot on the November ballot.

On the June 5 ballot in addition to Gordon are Chengzhi “George” Yang, 35, of Menlo Park, a Republican and a software engineer; Joseph Antonelli Rosas, 22, of Sunnyvale, a network security adviser who has no party affiliation; and Geby Espinosa, 47, of Mountain View, a Democrat and a small business owner.

Gordon, 63, now represents District 21, which includes Menlo Park, Atherton, Woodside, Portola Valley, East Palo Alto, and Palo Alto. But with the impending redistricting of the state, the same area will become part of District 24. The district has been reshaped to encompass areas including Mountain View, Sunnyvale, and most of the San Mateo County coastside from El Granada south.

RICH GORDON

Asked why voters should return him to Sacramento, Gordon cites his effectiveness during the year and a half he has served. In the last year, he said, 15 of the 19 bills he sponsored have been signed into law. “That’s the highest percentage in the Legislature,” he said, adding that many of the bills achieved bipartisan support.

He singled out two of those bills for the spotlight: One that authorized financial incentives to create more plastic bottle remanufacturing — and related jobs — in the state; and another that allowed the locally based Midpeninsula Open Space District to extend its borrowing capacity from 20-year loans to 30-year loans, which allowed it to restructure its bond package “for a huge savings this year,” he said.

Gordon said that funding for the financial incentives for plastic remanufacturing already exists through the program that charges consumers 5 cents per plastic bottle at the time of purchase. With the incentive program, at least one new plastic remanufacturing plant has opened in Riverside, with 120 new jobs, and more are likely to appear, he said.

The program allows businesses in the state to compete with China, where most plastic bottles are now remanufactured, then shipped back to the United States, Gordon said.

A Menlo Park resident, Gordon said he wants to continue his sojourns to Sacramento to continue working on key issues he has focused on since arriving in December 2010: government reform to fix the dysfunction of the Legislature; and the state’s fiscal health.

“We’ve got to make sure that what should be our number one priority — education — gets the funding it deserves.”

GBEY ESPINOSA

Entering the race with no civic or political experience, Espinosa said she’s running for the Assembly seat because she’s concerned about the poor economy and the number of bankruptcies in the state.

She said she wants to work to improve government and society in the areas of education, the right to work, term limits for the U.S. Congress, and the economy. Her platform also includes support for “the right to bear arms,” she said.

One remedy for the economy:

“Let the farmers grow hemp,” she said. “From hemp, we can get the taxes and create jobs. California becomes a leader in the nation.”

Espinosa is co-owner of The Contenders Gym in Mountain View.

JOSEPH ANTONELLI ROSAS

Education and “getting the money out of politics” are Rosas’ top priorities, he said. If elected, he would push for increasing funding for the University of California and California State University systems by $500 million each, increase community college funding by $200 million, and increase K-12 school funding by $6.1 billion.

“I will also ensure that this money goes to the students,” he said. “I will propose that we cap school officials’ salaries.”

To pay for these measures, he would ask voters to approve income tax increases of 1 percent to 3 percent on families with incomes above $500,000. Another proposal: “Require the annual reassessment of non-residential property for tax purposes,” and eliminate the current loopholes allowing businesses to sell property without triggering a reassessment.

Regarding his other priority, Rosas said: “Money has an undue influence on our political system. Not only do campaign contributions influence politicians, but all the spending on advertising for ballot measures corrupts that system as well.”

Rosas’ civic experience includes being a youth leader in Peninsula Interfaith Action; leadership in local California Common Cause and Democracy Matters citizens groups; and participating in the Occupy San Jose movement.

Measure A resolves questions over control of jail

By Daniel DeBolt

County officials hope voters approve Measure A on June 5, as it would resolve a legal quandary over a restructuring of the county's jails two years ago.

In 2010 the Santa Clara County Board of Supervisors transferred control of much of the county's jail system to the county sheriff in a restructuring that has saved $7 million a year. Opponents of that decision, including Supervisor Liz Kniss and the Santa Clara County Correctional Peace Officers Association, said the move violated a 1988 amendment to the county charter and therefore needed a public vote.

After two lawsuits claiming the board's 2010 decision was illegal, including one from the correctional officers association, the board is finally requesting that public vote. Measure A would confirm the 2010 restructuring and give county supervisors the leeway to make such restructuring moves in the future.

Measure A asks voters to "reaffirm the recent restructuring, ensure compliance with the law, and clarify and broaden the Board of Supervisors' discretion in determining how to most efficiently operate the county jails" says the argument for it, signed by all five county supervisors.

Measure A

"I firmly support Measure A," said Kniss, whose district includes Mountain View and Palo Alto. "When the proposal was made to move the Department of Corrections under the jurisdiction of the sheriff, I voted against it. I believed then as I do now that only the voters can reverse the arrangements they put into place when the Department of Corrections was made a separate department in 1988."

Shortly after the 2010 restructuring, San Jose lawyer James McManis sued the county "to make sure the county followed the law like the rest of us."

"We got exactly exactly what the lawsuit is designed to get," McManis said. "The supervisors are doing what they should have done a long time ago, which is putting it to a vote of the people."

McManis said he agreed to drop the lawsuit when the measure was proposed.

Who's the boss?

County Counsel Miguel Marquez reportedly told the Board of Supervisors that the 2010 restructuring would stand up to a lawsuit because the Department of Correction would still run the jails, but "in cooperation" and "in conjunction" with the sheriff.

But Kniss and others say the Santa Clara County Sheriff is now the one really in charge of the county's jails. That conflicts with a 1988 county charter amendment that created the Department of Corrections to run the county jails, and put a chief of corrections in charge.

"When you are dealing with the law there's different ways things can be interpreted, said Gary Graves, chief operating officer of Santa Clara County. "We believe what we implemented two years ago was consistent with the charter."

"The jail was not given to the sheriff to run," Graves added.

McManis disagreed.

"The people at the county are very clever people," McManis said. "The county charter adopted by the voters required the director of corrections to operate the jails. The county tried to get around that by taking all the functions from the director of corrections and transferring them the the sheriff. Except they left the director in charge of a couple trivial assignments and said he is still in charge of the jails. You don't have to be a rocket scientist to see through that."

No opposition to Measure A has emerged and no ballot argument against it was filed. ▣ father of two kids, I want them to inherit from us a California where the schools excel, UCs are affordable, and the state budget is stable."

Listing education and the state budget as the top two issues he would work on if elected, he said: "We should focus on fostering a desire to learn in our students. To that end, we must be willing to explore using new technologies, new systems, as well as new methods in teaching."

Regarding the state budget, he said: "We must stop the boom and bust cycles of state budgeting. One way to achieve it is to tie compensation of public servants to (the) median salary factored by the unemployment rate so state spending will rise and fall with economic cycles."

"It will also give public servants a financial incentive to serve the interest of the public."

Yang's prior civic experience was as chair of the San Bruno Bicycle and Pedestrian Committee. ▣

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER
ESTATE OF: Remedios T. Aquino
Case No.: 1-12-PR-170517

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of Remedios T.
Aquino.

A Petition for Probate has been filed by:
Evelyn Coloma in the Superior Court of California, County of SANTA CLARA.
The Petition for Probate requests that: Evelyn Coloma be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. The petition requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate.
The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by the court. The petition requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.
A HEARING on the petition will be held on June 7, 2012 at 9:00 a.m. in Dept.
3 of the Superior Court of California, County of Santa Clara, located at 191 North First Street, San Jose, CA, 95113. If you object to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. If you are a creditor or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim
