Hospital district gets high marks, survey says

By Nick Veronin

A majority of people living within the El Camino Hospital District are “highly satisfied” with the job the hospital is doing and a majority of recent patients rated the overall quality of care they received from local health care organization as “excellent or very good,” a recent hospital-commissioned survey found.

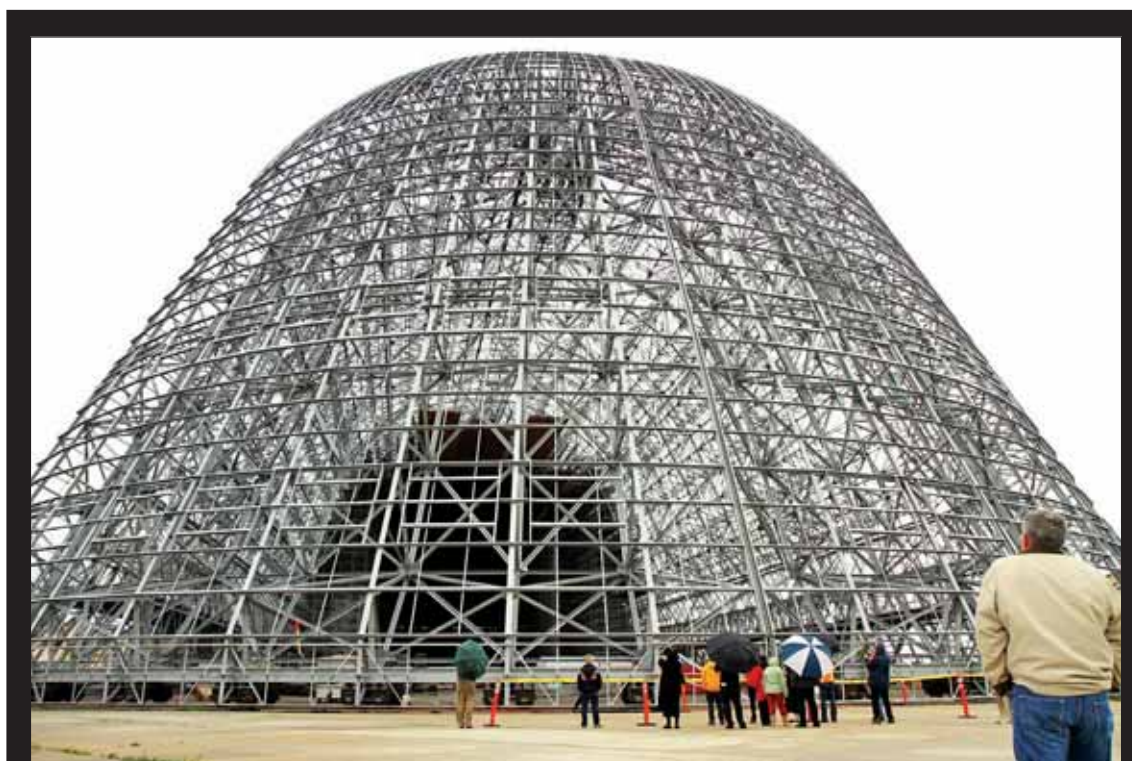

The survey found that 86 percent of district residents believe the hospital “contributes directly to the quality of health care delivered to the community,” and that a majority feel the hospital is an important local institution, according to a July 23 press release.

“These survey results affirm that district residents believe we continue to deliver on our original mission — as envisioned by the voters more than 50 years ago — to provide quality health care services to the community,” John Zoglin, chairman of the district’s board of directors, said in the release.

The survey was conducted the week of June 25, about one month after the Local Agency Formation Commission of Santa Clara County announced that an audit of El Camino had found the hospital and hospital district lacking in transparency, unaccountable to its constituents and in need of serious reform.

In the wake of that audit, LAF-CO Executive Director Neelima Palacherla said her agency would move to dissolve the district if its leadership did not make significant strides toward improving transparency and accountability.

The long task of stripping Moffett Field’s massive Hangar One, a local landmark since the 1930s, came to an end last week. Workers hired by the U.S. Navy took the last pieces of siding from the structure, wrapping up a year-long effort to abate the environmental pollution caused by the toxin-laced shell. Now stripped to its frame, an uncertain future awaits. A look back at the dismantling of Hangar One starts on page 8.

Tennis legend Alex Swetka dies at 94

By Andrea Gemmet

Local tennis legend Alex Swetka, who owned Swetka’s Tennis Shop in Mountain View with his wife, died July 17, a few months after being diagnosed with cancer. He was 94.

Swetka pursued competitive tennis for over 60 years, and continued playing up until his cancer diagnosis in May, his family said. He won local, national and international tournaments — more than 70 USTA National Championships, his family said — and was a representative of the United States for International Senior Tennis for over 20 years.

Beginning in 1994, Swetka competed in the International Tennis Federation’s senior circuit, and he won the Grand Slam — winning the hard, grass, clay and indoors national titles in singles — in 2007 and 2008, according to the federation. He was inducted into the Northern California Tennis Hall of Fame in 1995 and the San Jose Sports Hall of Fame in 1999. “He will always be remembered for his topspin and lefty action, which were a real rarity when playing in the over-90 division,” said the federation’s website.

During his tennis career, he enjoyed victories over tennis greats like Bobby Riggs, Wimbledon champion Gardener Mollo, and Swedish Davis Cup player Torsten Johanson, said his daughter Nancy Garcia.

“He put Mountain View on the world tennis map,” said Jere Schaefer, a friend of the Swetka family and longtime member of the Mountain View Tennis Club. She called Swetka a role model and true champion who served as an ambassador for tennis. “He will be dearly missed by all tennis players around the world,” she said.

Born in Clairton, Penn. in 1917, he settled in California after joining the United States Navy in 1941 and serving for six years. Swetka earned a degree in education from San Francisco State University, where he discovered

Gay marriage supporters file Chick-Fil-A appeal

By Daniel DeBolt

It appears that Chick-Fil-A’s chickens have come home to roost.

The company’s funding of anti-gay rights groups and president Dan Cathy’s recent remarks that the company is “guilty as charged” in opposing gay marriage has caused a major backlash against its efforts expand into Mountain View.

Thanks to a fundraising web page citing the company’s anti-gay stance, it took less than 14 hours last week to raise the $1,000 fee needed to have the City Council hear an appeal on the proposed Chick-Fil-A location at 1962 West El Camino Real. Zoning Administrator Peter Gilli had approved the restaurant and drive-through on July 10. The City Council could reverse or uphold that decision as soon as September 11.

Appellant David Speakman and his husband Richard were the first gay couple to marry in Santa Clara County in 2008. He says the company’s “bigoted” stance prompted him to take action.

“It’s not just a bigoted, evil company,” Speakman said. “It’s a company that wants a bad restaurant in a bad spot.”

Speakman and a group of employees of the Mountain View startup HighlightCam came up with the idea of using wepay.com to raise the appeal money, a site he calls a cross between Paypal and Kickstarter. Money continues to be donated by people who want their names on the list of 40-plus donors, which includes state Senate candidate Sally Lieber and HighlightCam’s

If you could compete in any Olympic sport, what would it be?

"I would choose football (soccer) because it was very unfortunate that I didn't get to play when I was young, so I feel like I could play it now. I would do it and just rock it."

Gyanesh Lama, St. Louis

"I think the sport I would like to do first would be the marathon. I've run one and it was a really transformative experience for me. Getting through (it gave me) a real feeling of accomplishment and it was exhilarating, as difficult as it was."

Hunter Whitney, Mountain View

"My favorite Olympic sport is beach volleyball. I would love to do that. I love the beach."

CRIME BRIEFS

BURGLARY

A laptop and set of keys were stolen from a home in the 100 block of N. Rengstorff Avenue, police said.

A 54-year-old woman called Mountain View police to report the crime on July 24 at 8:30 a.m. Other than the laptop and keys, nothing else was reported missing and there was no sign of forced entry, police said.

of a home in the 1800 block of Appletree Lane, police said.

According to police spokeswoman Liz Wylie, the 32-year-old victim was working from home on July 17 at about 4:50 p.m., when he looked out the front window of his house and saw a man ridding away with his gray Trex road bike.

The thief was described as a Hispanic man in his 20s, of medium height and build, and wearing green or brown shorts and a white T-shirt, Wylie said.

The man told police the bike is valued at about $3,500.

Newcomers vie for seat on council

SIX CANDIDATES EYE OPENINGS ON MOUNTAIN VIEW CITY COUNCIL

By Daniel DeBolt

A week into the City Council election nomination period and six potential candidates have pulled papers to enter the November 2012 race, including two who are relatively new to the city's political scene.

IT administrator Jim Neal and retired Hewlett Packard data analyst Margaret Capriles hope to give four more established candidates a run for their money this year. Neal became involved in city government recently when he worked to oppose the city's new ban on smoking near publicly accessible buildings, while Capriles says she wants to make sure good transportation systems are in place and that the city develops in a "balanced way" under the new 2030 general plan.

Margaret Capriles

Jim Neal

Neal was a major opponent of the city's new smoking ban and circulated a petition against it. He's a regular patron of downtown's bars who smokes cigars, wears a cowboy hat and a jacket with the Jack Daniel's logo on it. He even wrote Dr. Seuss-style poetry about the smoking ban.

"Once I started going to City Hall on a regular basis and I saw all the things going on, that is what prompted me to run," Neal said.

Later, he worked to oppose the city's proposed plastic bag ban, saying there should be better efforts to recycle them instead. He distributed a list of "101 additional uses" of a plastic bag.

Politically, Neal says he doesn't like to "identify myself with any group" but says his politics are "definitely close to libertarian."

"I think people and businesses are being over-regulated," Neal said. "I definitely believe businesses should be regulated but only to the minimum extent possible to prevent harm."

Neal says he has been homeless five times since he came to California 23 years ago and said in an email, "If we resolved the homeless problem, it would also make a significant impact on reducing the amount of plastic bags in the environment. The other large factor is to provide an incentive for people to recycle or reuse them, such as the CVS Green Bag Tag program."

Neal said he pulled himself out of homelessness because he "refused to give up no matter what" in his search for a job. As a council member he said he would "work with nonprofit organizations and community groups to provide food, shelter, and education where possible, and treatment where needed" to the homeless. "I think community based solutions are the most effective because there

Four City Council seats up for grabs in November, including those held by incumbents John Inks and mayor Mike Kasperzak who will work to remain on the council another four years. Tom Means and Laura Macias are both terming out after eight years on the seven-member council.

Planning commissioners John McAlister and Chris Clark will be running for the second time — both lost by a small margin in 2008's council race.

With the exception of Inks, the candidates said in emails that they will agree to the city's voluntary campaign expenditure limit of $21,388 this year. Inks was not available to comment on the subject.

The nomination period for council candidates ends August 10.

Teacher enters school board race

By Nick Veronin

Christopher Chiang, a teacher with an passion for progressive educational methods, is the sixth person to confirm plans to run for one of three seats on the Mountain View Whisman School District board.

"There's real things we can do to fix our schools," Chiang said.

According to Chiang, there is a disconnect between teachers who want to push public education into the 21st Century and policy makers, both in Sacramento and Washington D.C., who are stuck in the outdated 20th Century model of passive learning. Learning multiplication tables and studying history is important, but schools need to be engaging students in hands-on learning, using computers and developing real-world skills, he said.

'We are undermining our kids' future if we are teaching them to only do rote memorization.'

CHRIS CHIANG

"We are undermining our kids' future if we are teaching them to only do rote memorization," he said. "If all they can do is repeat what is on a standardized test, we aren't preparing them for today's economy."

After running on a platform of education reform in an unsuccessful bid for the state Senate in June, Chiang said he came to the realization that he ought to seek change in his backyard first if he ever hoped to change things at the state level. Chiang said he is prepared to push the district to move away from old modes of teaching — not only to improve the education of students attending MVWSD schools, but in the hope that

Buzzed-about Quora moving to Castro Street

By Nick Veronin

The question-and-answer social networking site Quora is moving its operation from downtown Palo Alto to Castro Street, bringing a staff of 40, tens of millions of dollars of investment capital and an ambitious goal. "Quora hopes to attract so many users that their inherent knowledge will construct a comprehensive picture of the world," according to a 2011 article in Wired Magazine.

In theory, if enough people join the site and use it regularly, Quora might accomplish this monumental task. Imagine a massive game of 20 questions — or, 20 trillion questions — with people from all over the globe asking any question that springs to mind while others with the knowledge to answer do just that. That's Quora in a nutshell.

Once a question has been asked, the system remembers it, so anyone with the same question is directed to the thread of answers already in progress. The best answers to a given question are voted up by the community. The worst are voted down.

This may sound identical to Yahoo! Answers, an observation that is not lost on Quora users.

COMMUNITY BRIEFS

BULLIS, LASD STILL AT ODDS

The latest exchange of legal volleys between Bullis Charter School and the Los Altos School District came this month in the form of two separate court filings — each one contradicting the other.

On July 3, lawyers with Bullis filed a motion “to compel compliance with judgment and writ” against the school district. In lay terms, the motion is essentially a legal action intended to push the school district to cooperate with the charter by agreeing to provide an entire campus to the district by the 2013-14 school year and by immediately conferring with Bullis “in good faith to provide additional facilities at the Egan (Middle School) location,” where Bullis plans to run its program in the 2012-13 school year.

LASD’s lawyers fired back on July 24, filing a motion calling on the court to deny the Bullis motion. The district’s lawyers argued that the charter school already has more than enough. “BCS’s request to order the closure of a district school has no support in the law,” district officials said in a July 24 press release.

Ken Moore, chair of the Bullis board of directors, said that district lawyers were simply trying to block the charter from getting what it is legally entitled to — throwing “everything but the kitchen sink” into their legal arguments and “seeing what sticks.”

A representative from the Los Altos School District could not be reached for comment.

Representatives from Bullis and LASD will appear in court once again on Aug. 15 in a hearing before Judge Patricia M. Lucas.

CITY HIRES NEW HEAD OF COMMUNITY SERVICES

J.P. de la Montaigne has been tapped to oversee the city’s Community Services Department.

As community services director, de la Montaigne is responsible for city divisions including Performing Arts, Shoreline at Mountain View, Parks, Recreation, Forestry and Roadway Landscape, and Administration. His duties include managing activities and programs at city sites such as Shoreline, supervising the upkeep of Stevens Creek Trail and maintaining Mountain View’s parks, roads and trees.

“The facilities we have are first-class, the programs we offer are well-received by the citizens and the staff are professional,” de la Montaigne said. “I don’t see anything as being broken. My first few months is just to learn the whole operation.”

City Manager Dan Rich said he was encouraged by de la Montaigne’s 30 years of experience in various community services divisions, including his previous post as community services director in Peoria, Ariz. and as the manager of Shoreline Park and golf course for one year.

Mountain View’s previous community services director retired. Rich has also appointed Regina Maurantonio as new the assistant director.

De la Montaigne will have an annual salary of $165,000 and report to the city manager.

“Bud Frump” (David Mister) encounters “Hedy La Rue” (Sarah Griner) in Foothill Music Theatre’s “How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying.”

Delightfully dated

‘HOW TO SUCCEED’ HAS A CHARMING PERIOD LOOK — BUT MAKING FUN OF CORPORATIONS NEVER GETS OLD

By Jeanie K. Smith

Foothill Music Theatre’s summer musical is an anticipated event by musical lovers, as director Jay Manley always manages to assemble a talented team. This year’s “How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying” is no exception, sporting a terrific cast and technical elements to match.

After taking Broadway by storm in 1961 with Robert Morse in the lead, this musical languished in the archives for decades, deemed too politically incorrect to salvage for a modern audience, because of its presumably dated material regarding corporate ethics and office shenanigans. But a couple of revivals (1995 with Matthew Broderick and 2011 with Daniel Radcliffe) have rediscovered the fun and the heart of the show. And having a good laugh at a corporate spoof remains therapeutic.

Based on a satirical book of 1955 about how to climb the corporate ladder, the musical takes our hero, J. Pierrepont Finch (Michael Rhone), on a journey through the World Wide Wicket company as he follows the book’s advice. Starting in the mailroom, he miraculously maneuvers promotions without training or tenure, acquires a girlfriend along the way — Rosemary (Corrie Lenn Borris) — and fends off the boss’s scheming nephew, Bud Frump (David Mister). The boss, J. B. Biggley (Walter M. Mayes), has entanglements of his own — namely his mistress, Miss Hedy LaRue (Sarah Griner) — and hopes Finch will solve his problems.

THEATER REVIEW

When Finch launches his “big idea” and it gets bungled on national television, all hell breaks loose. But hey, it’s a musical comedy, so you know it will work out. The fun is seeing how Finch manages to escape a disaster — and how yet another corporation cover-up can be a happy ending.

The standard numbers include “Happy to Keep His Dinner Warm,” sung by Rosemary after falling in love at first sight; “Rosemary,” when the penny finally drops for Finch; and “I Believe in You,” when Finch gives himself a pep talk in the executive washroom. “The Brotherhood of Man,” a knockout number by the whole company, is a Broadway showstopper complete with dancing on tables. The controversial number “A Secretary is not a Toy” is given a ’60s sitcom gloss of tongue-in-cheek innocence, with lots of fanny-ogling.

Rhone is spot-on perfect for Finch, with his boyish good looks, dynamite voice and impish grin. You would swear he’s channeling Morse, although he’s even cuter and livelier. He’s well-matched by Borris as Rosemary, who has a beautiful voice and just the right mix of girlish eagerness and womanly bravado. Mister gleefully inhabits the villainous Frump, charming us with first-rate song and dance and whining.

Katie O’Byron plays office maven Smitty to a tee, smirking and mugging to great effect; she brightens “Cinderella, Darling” and “Been a Long Day” with her strong vocals and comic skills. Other standouts include Mayes as Biggley, whose ability to play against his imposing physical presence makes certain moments even funnier; and Griner, wonderfully shameless as the hot tomato LaRue, whose lovely singing voice is an unexpected treat. The whole ensemble of junior clerks, executives and secretaries keeps it lively and engaging.

Joe Ragey’s colorful fantasia on office decor and Janis Bergmann’s neon jewel-tone costume palette superbly deliver the early 1960s through a comedic time warp. Music director Catherine Snider ably guides her small, capable orchestra through a demanding score.

One caveat: The show is uncut, running close to three hours including intermission. Plan accordingly, and then sit back and enjoy this superb summer romp.

“How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying,” presented by Foothill Music Theatre at Smithwick Theatre, Foothill College, 12345 El Monte Road, Los Altos Hills. Runs through Aug. 12, with 8 p.m. shows Thursday through Saturday and 2 p.m. matinees on Sundays. Tickets are $10-$28. Go to foothillmusicals.com or call 650-949-7360.

CHICK-FIL-A

CEO. The wepay.com page notes the company's funding of anti-gay rights groups, which it calls "hate." "In particular, they fund hate of the gay members of our town and their families."

Meanwhile intense controversy around Chick-Fil-A has sparked nationally by comments from Chick-Fil-A president Dan Cathy who suggested that gay marriage is "inviting God's judgment on our nation" and that the company is "guilty as charged" in opposing gay marriage.

The comments spurred the creator of the Muppets, Jim Henson Co., to pull out of an agreement to produce toys for the chain, while the mayors of Boston and Chicago said Chick-Fil-A would not be welcome in those cities. In response to the backlash, Chick-Fil-A released a statement saying "going forward, our intent is to leave the policy debate over same-sex marriage to the government and political arena."

Mountain View Mayor Mike Kasperzak said he couldn't really jump on the bandwagon.

"As you know the mayors of Boston and Chicago are a little different than the mayor of Mountain View," said Kasper-zak. "They actually run the city. Mountain View's mayor couldn't say, 'We're not going to allow them in town.'"

Because it is a quasi-judicial hearing, "it's not appropriate for any of us to say one thing or another. It's sort of like going into a trial with the jury already having said, 'Oh, they're guilty.'"

But Kasperzak adds that "this is clearly an issue that is going to quite active for the rest of the summer."

Speakman has become quite familiar with the national outcry over Chick-Fil-A.

"I've been getting a lot of emails from across the country, particularly the Bay Area, from people asking if I had any pointers for them," Speakman said. "There are people in San Jose that didn't realize Chick-Fil-A was moving in until it was too late."

Speakman said he and his group know they can't win the appeal based on Chick-Fil-A's politics. He's been working on a list of other reasons, including the fact a restaurant with the goal of bringing in as many cars as possible doesn't fit in with the city's efforts to make El Camino Real more pedestrian friendly or the council's interest in studying a ban on new El Camino Real drive-throughs.

Speakman said he recently learned about Chick-Fil-A's use of Styrofoam cups, a practice that, according to Chick-Fil-A's website, is environmentally friendly because the company says it recycles the cups.

Speakman called that "kind of ridiculous."

'It's not just a bigoted, evil company. It's a company that wants a bad restaurant in a bad spot.'

DAVID SPEAKMAN

"Every other restaurant is moving away from Styrofoam because it's so bad," Speakman said. "And the (Styrofoam) trash accumulates in the Bay."

There's definitely an issue with trash, said resident Bruce England.

"There's a lot more throw-away material when you go through a drive-through, a lot more refuse impact," England said, adding that the drive-through goes against the zero-waste aspirations city officials hold for Mountain View.

England is working with another group that has a much different approach to opposing Chick-Fil-A, "a solid group of people who have experience in appeals like this." The gay marriage issue won't be part of their effort.

"We think we are more likely to be successful with more focused approach," he said.

England was hesitant to even comment about how much Chick-Fil-A's anti-gay marriage stance motivated him.

"Because of our backgrounds, we know the kinds of things that work or don't work," he said.

"We wouldn't even have started on that premise. There are just restrictions on what a city can and can't do."

The group had planned to make a second appeal, with England offering to pay the fee himself, until zoning Administrator Gilli said on Wednesday the city would not accept it because an appeal had already been filed.

England said the group would focus on the conditional use permit issued for the drive-through, which he says is too close to nearby apartment buildings. Despite Chick-Fil-A's claim that extensive outreach was made to the adjacent complex, England said he asked around and found that many had not heard of the proposal.

During the city's general plan visioning process, England said "the city came out loud and clear in support of walk-ability and bike-ability in the city. "More drive-throughs is inconsistent with that vision. Also the Grand Boulevard Initiative supports better pedestrian and biking access, which means de-emphasizing car travel."

Speakman said last week that he has similar concerns.

"We cannot win on any claim based upon this evil company's hateful actions against minorities," he writes. "But we can fight the land use change and the increased danger to our population from cars driving up and over the sidewalks to get to fast food — a danger that is not worth the risk to our otherwise bicycle- and pedestrian-friendly city."

"It doesn't matter who owns the restaurant," Speakman said. Considering positions the council has taken previously, "it doesn't sound like something the City Council would approve." ■ a love of tennis at the age of 30. He taught fifth grade in San Francisco for 20 years. With his wife Sally, a fellow teacher whom he married in 1956, Swetka spent weekends and summers playing tennis and running tournaments in Golden Gate Park, his family said.

In search of warmer weather and a larger garden, Swetka moved the family to Mountain View in 1966 and the couple opened Swetka's Tennis Shop in 1969.

"Swetka's Tennis Shop thrives even with all the online tennis stores and big chain sporting good stores because Alex always made his customers feel like family. Alex will be missed," said Michael Cooke, the United States Tennis Association Northern California board president.

"The USTA Northern California section is extremely proud to have counted Alex as one of their own and will miss him greatly," said a statement on the USTA website. "He was an outstanding example of tennis being the sport for a lifetime. He will always be a role model to seniors on the benefits of staying fit and active."

Hangar One, revealed

Above: A view of Hangar One in 2011 when it was still intact. Right: The same view a year later, with all but one small section of windows and siding removed.

As many as 100 workers per day labored over the past year to strip the siding from Moffett Field's Hangar One, in an environmental cleanup that has caused a mix of awe over the emergence of the gigantic skeleton and sadness over the lack of a plan for new siding.

According to the U.S. Navy, as much as 1.7 million pounds of siding, most of it laminated in PCBs, lead and asbestos, was removed and trucked to Grassy Mountain landfill in Utah.

An average of 65 workers a day looked like ants removing 30,382 panels from the massive hangar, pressure washing the frame and coating it with silver paint. The cost of the project increased from $26 million to $28.1 million because of unforeseen conditions, additional cleaning and preparation of the door mechanisms and the salvage of historical items for the hangar's owner, NASA, wrote the Navy's Scott Anderson in an email.

At left: Dismantling of the hangar's siding started April 18, 2011. At right: Beneath the toxin-laced siding, a layer of redwood is revealed.

Clockwise from top: Two workers with a bird's-eye view of the stripped hangar; workers remove the last pieces from hangar's roof on July 19; wearing protective gear, a worker uses a high-pressure hose to clean the skeleton.

ling pro-Quora answers to the question, "What are the differences between Quora and Yahoo! Answers?" are that Quora is not supported by advertisements; there is a limited window of time in which someone can reply to questions posed on Yahoo! Answers, which is not the case with Quora; and people's Quora profiles are connected to their Facebook accounts, which means real names are used — a requirement that works to discourage anonymous trolling of question threads.

"From what I've been reading in the press, it's a pretty hot, up-and-coming startup," said Oscar Garcia, president of the Mountain View Chamber of Commerce. "I'm very, very excited."

Garcia said it is always great to have an exciting company in Mountain View, as it raises the profile of the city. With more people working downtown, there will inevitably be more business for local restaurants and other merchants in and around Castro Street, he said.

"The rising tide raises all ships," Garcia said.

While Quora's user base is great at answering questions, its founders are not so approachable. They did not respond to requests for an interview through its website or when a reporter visited the company's Palo Alto headquarters. Co-founder Adam D'Angelo did responded to the Quora thread, "Why is Quora moving to Mountain View?"

"We're running out of space in our current office," D'Angelo wrote. "So we've been looking for more space for a while now. Because the downtown Palo Alto market is so hot, there is no available office space big enough for us nearby."

D'Angelo said he and Quora co-founder Charlie Cheever wanted to find an office close to a Caltrain station, near "restaurants and other downtown amenities." The new Quora headquarters will take up the fourth and fifth floors of 650 Castro St., in the building that currently houses the UPS Store and Le Boulanger, according to Palo Alto-based technology blog TechCrunch.

D'Angelo and Cheever came from Facebook, leaving the social network in 2009 to start their project. According to the Bloomberg tech blog, Tech Deals, the two recently leveraged their Silicon Valley connections to raise $50 million, which came in a round of investment in May.

The billionaire co-founder of PayPal, Peter Thiel, led that round of investment, according to Tech Deals. Thiel has also invested in Facebook and Zynga. ▀

Mountain View might be a leader in the world of education.

"Policy makers need to see school districts experimenting," he said. "We're in a perfect place to really show that there is good policy that isn't happening in Sacramento."

Chiang is proposing tracking more than just standardized test scores — polling students, parents and teachers to find out what they like about their schools and what they think could be improved.

He said he would advocate for programs that would give financial incentives to teachers who pursue the administrative track. "I really believe we should be proactively going to our teachers and saying, 'We need you to be a principal and we will pay you to go to school.'" If there isn't state money to support it, he would pursue the option of asking local companies to help foot the bill — a cost he thinks firms like Google and LinkedIn would be willing to support, since they will ultimately benefit from better schools with better employees.

Chiang has taught in both public and private schools. Next year he will begin his new job as a sixth-grade history teacher at Sacred Heart Schools in Atherton. He has a two-year-old daughter he plans to send to either Castro or Bubb (he lives on the border between the two school's boundary lines).

In addition to running for the school board, he has started the MVW21: Mountain View Whisman School Study Group — a series of privately run seminars designed to help prospective "board candidates and school supporters develop a vision for Mountain View Schools for the 21st century," according to the website, mvw21.org. "This is not an official policy-setting organization, but an open space to exchange new ideas."

He said he has been working to contact leaders of each district school's PTA, as well as all of the declared candidates planning to run in the November board election. The first MVW21 meeting will be held on Aug. 9 at 7 p.m. at a yet-to-be-determined location. Chiang isn't sure which candidates will attend, but he hopes all will eventually attend the meetings, which he plans to hold regularly until the Nov. 6 election.

Chiang's candidate website is at whyChris.org ▀

are usually fewer administrative hurdles to deal with and more of the money tends to go where it is most needed.”

Among the other issues Neal is passionate about is high-speed rail. “I’m definitely opposed to high-speed rail,” he said. “All the numbers keep changing as to how much it’s going to cost. Every month there’s a new plan. I just don’t see how they are going to pay for it.”

Neal supports housing for Google in North Bayshore as a way to balance the number of jobs in the city’s planning pipeline. He says the city’s housing development process should have less “regulation and red tape” so developers are able to meet the local demand for housing, thus lowering prices.

In council meetings about housing projects, council members are concerned with “such minutia,” Neal said. “Where a tree is going to go, where to put a parking lot, things like that. It increases the cost of housing.”

Neal lives with his wife two blocks east of Castro Street and has four kids who live in Ohio. He’s lived in Mountain View for seven years.

Neal has a Facebook page for his campaign at facebook.com/nealformountainviewcitycouncil.

Margaret Capriles

Age: 69

Neighborhood: Varsity Park

Political affiliation: moderate Democrat

Job: data quality consultant

Capriles says her experience maintaining the quality of data in Hewlett Packard’s databases would come in handy as a City Council member.

“More details give you a better decision, not based on hearsay but on actual facts,” Capriles said.

For Capriles, the big issues in the city’s near future are related to land use, transportation and city finances.

“I like what we’ve done so far,” Capriles said of the city’s development. But under the new 2030 general plan for the city, much development is in store areas such as El Camino Real, San Antonio shopping center and East Whisman, she said. “It makes me want to be there and have a vote in that.”

She says the council made the right decision to not allow housing for Google in North Bayshore.

“From what we know right now I think it was the right decision,” Capriles said, noting the nearby wildlife and Shoreline Park, which she called “a very special area.”

In deciding on infill development, “I want to make sure make sure the solutions we come up with are very homogeneous to communities that exist,” Capriles said. In regards to the proposals for an 11-story office building and 200-room hotel at San Antonio shopping center, she said the size of the buildings would not “blend in well” with the surrounding neighborhood. Such developments should be “very welcoming” to neighbors, she said.

“I think we are a very well-managed city,” Capriles said in regards to the city budget. “Mountain View has an opportunity to continue to manage the city very well.”

To do that, Capriles said the city needs to find other ways to invest and “get a return on investment in our money to go above and beyond the tax base we have.” She added that there are still some grants out there and available as funding for projects.

Capriles points to her experience on the advisory committee for Leadership Mountain View, of which she is also a graduate. She’s also been involved in the Hope to Health Initiative for the El Camino Hospital Foundation, which raises money for studies on women’s health issues. She’s raised four children, and became involved in “everything from swimming to scouts to dancing to gymnastics.”

Capriles is the only woman in the field of candidates so far.

“I definitely think it’s important to keep the balance of men and women on the council,” she said. It would maintain a diversity and freshness in the perspectives, she said.

Capriles has a website for her campaign: margaretcapriles.com.

HOSPITAL SURVEY

The audit was not mentioned in the hospital’s press release.

The survey cost the hospital $15,000 to conduct. It consisted of 10 main questions, which were fielded by a national public opinion company called Quality Data Management. The questions were put to 325 survey takers — all of them 21 or older. A report based on the results of the survey was compiled by JumpStart, a market research firm. According to JumpStart, the results of the survey are “statistically projectable to the district.”

Going by JumpStart’s statistical projection, 65 percent of district denizens are “extremely/very satisfied” with the hospital, 73 percent are opposed to dissolving the district and half of all those living within the district’s boundaries feel it is extremely or very important that El Camino Hospital remains independent, locally owned and locally controlled.

Simply put, the JumpStart report concludes in its executive summary, “the majority of community members believe it is extremely/very important that El Camino Hospital retains its independence and continues to be locally owned and controlled.”

“We’re really pleased with the results,” said Chris Ernst, a spokeswoman for the hospital. According to Ernst, the survey was intended to gauge the community’s general perception of the hospital. “With a lot of the questions that have been raised, we wanted to get a pulse of what the community was thinking.”

In the wake of the LAFCO report, the El Camino has faced increased criticism from the hospital’s workers’ union. Officials with the Service Employees International Union-United Healthcare Workers have said the hospital, as well as the district, lack transparency and accused El Camino executives of taking exorbitant salaries and bonuses while the hospital’s technical and service staff have seen cuts to benefits.

Throughout the union protests and negative press the hospital has endured in recent months, Ernst said administration has remained confident that the public still appreciates the work El Camino does in the community. The survey is a confirmation that the hospital is highly valued by district residents, she said. ▣

■ EDITORIAL THE OPINION OF THE VOICE

A game of chicken

Chik-Fil-A has gotten off to a rocky start in its quest to open a restaurant in Mountain View, and the path is unlikely to get smoother any time soon, thanks to a growing controversy over the company's stance on same-sex marriage.

The chain of fried-chicken sandwich restaurants first ran afoul of the City Council in February with its request for a drive-through for its proposed location at 1962 W. El Camino Real. Citing concerns over pollution from idling cars, a majority of council members said they'd like to look into a moratorium on new drive-throughs.

But with no moratorium yet on the books, Chick-Fil-A managed to get approval of its restaurant from the city's zoning administrator, Peter Gilli — with a drive-through. That success is tempered by the fact that two groups of Mountain View residents are pursuing an appeal over the Chick-Fil-A approval, one of which was clearly spurred by the company's anti-gay rights stance.

The Georgia-based company's funding of causes such as Proposition 8, the state initiative banning same-sex marriage, has galvanized gay rights groups.

Comments from Chick-Fil-A president Dan Cathy in a recent article in the Baptist Press only reinforced the growing perception that the company actively pursues a homophobic agenda. "We are very much supportive of the family — the biblical definition of the family unit," Cathy is quoted as saying. According to a report by advocacy group Equality Matters, Chick-Fil-A's WinShape Foundation in 2010 donated more than $2 million to groups with anti-gay agendas, including the Marriage & Family Foundation.

Even the Muppets are abandoning Chick-Fil-A. The Jim Henson Co. announced July 20 that it would no longer provide toys for Chick-Fil-A's children's meals, saying the company "has celebrated and embraced diversity and inclusiveness for over fifty years and we have notified Chick-Fil-A that we do not wish to partner with them on any future endeavors." Money from Chick-Fil-A is being donated to GLAAD, the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation, according to a post on the Henson Co.'s Facebook page.

Locally, three groups have emerged to try to overturn the approval of what would be the first Chik-Fil-A restaurant in the Bay Area. A group of employees of the Mountain View startup HighlightCam quickly raised $1,000 on wepay.com to pay for an appeal to the City Council.

One of the organizers of the appeal, David Speakman, told local newspapers that he and his husband were the first gay couple to be legally married in Santa Clara County. He said, "It's not just a bigoted evil company. It's a company that wants a bad restaurant in a bad spot."

The problem faced by the appellants is that council members say that disagreeing with a company's philosophy may not be grounds for keeping it from operating in Mountain View. For the council, whether the proposed restaurant site, which is currently a Sizzler, is in fact a bad spot for a drive-through restaurant may become a main issue, along with concerns about adding more cars to an El Camino Real that council members say they want to be more pedestrian friendly.

Most companies are careful to hide controversial political stances for fear of alienating customers, but some, like Chick-Fil-A, trumpet them. Chick-Fil-A's founders and owners are free to support whatever causes they wish, and direct their profits toward organizations that mirror their beliefs. Mountain View residents should decide whether mixing an intolerant agenda with chicken is a recipe for success.

■ LETTERS VOICES FROM THE COMMUNITY

FOIS GRAS PUZZLER

With an almost infinite variety of foods to choose from, one has to wonder why Joey Elenterio, executive chef of Mountain View's Chez TJ restaurant, has continued to serve foie gras in defiance of the law. Perhaps Chez TJ officials believe that any publicity is good publicity. However, their action risks more than raising the ire of animal rights activists. Laws are typically passed with majority public support and many of us are tired of special interests seeking a "loophole." The law of the land should be decided in court and not in the kitchen.

CANCER HELP STILL AVAILABLE

I was dismayed to see in a recent edition that the Cancer Support Community in Mountain View was closing its doors. I know how vital those types of services are to the community and what a loss it is to all of us.

But I was doubly dismayed to see patient Peggy Liou's comments about how devastating it was to her not to have anywhere to go now for the sorts of resources that help patients and families through the non-medical part of the cancer journey, because I wanted her to know that isn't true.

Please help to spread the word to Peggy and survivors like her that there is a new non-profit organization called Cancer CAREpoint (www.cancercarepoint.org), which provides that very critical, non-clinical support to patient/survivors, caregivers and families.

Cancer CAREpoint's focus is on providing free resources to clients and if we don't have the resource they need, we will do our best to find it for them.

Although we are located in San Jose, we are right at 85/Los Gatos Boulevard, so it is very easy to reach our location. It is only a straight-shot, 10-minute trip from Mountain View.

I'm looking forward to hearing from Peggy and any others who want to be welcomed and cared for with compassion and expertise.

LONG VIEW ON HIGH-SPEED RAIL

A big thank you to Silicon Valley's state legislators, including Assembly Members Jerry Hill, Rich Gordon, Jim Beall, and Paul Fong, who have taken the long view and voted to support high-speed rail. The project has been scaled back to reflect the needs of the Bay Area and will modernize Caltrain, dramatically improving regional mobility. As a resident of Mountain View and staff member at the Silicon Valley Leadership Group, I believe this is the right move for the city and region, and thank our legislators and Gov. Brown for their leadership and vision.

MOUNTAIN VIEW'S LITTLE BEE POPS CREATES ORGANIC FROZEN TREATS

By Emily Efland

When Mountain View resident Liz Snyder said no to her 6-year-old daughter's request for a treat from the ice cream truck for the "umpteenth time," her daughter took a stand.

"Mom, why don't you sell your pops at the park?" Snyder describes her daughter as saying. "Then moms and kids could be happy."

A little over a year after this frustrated suggestion, Snyder's daughter now finds herself with the title "Chief Tasting Officer" in Snyder's new frozen treat company, Little Bee Pops. A devoted advocate of sustainable, local and healthful food products, Snyder had always refused to buy commercial treats due to their chemically enhanced ingredients.

After pondering her daughter's idea to sell her own treats, she decided to start a company devoted to creating all-natural Popsicle-like treats using only locally grown produce. Upon successfully raising its $15,000 startup goal on the business-funding website Kickstarter, Little Bee Pops had its first sale in April of this year.

The company's three owners, Snyder and her friends Lilia Schwartz and Melissa Patel, all collaborate on creating various flavors using seasonal produce. The pops vary each week depending on what produce farmers' markets are offering, and aside from the staple ingredients of organic fruit and honey, they often include various vegetables not usually found in desserts. One current flavor, "Raspberry Flash," is made from a mix of organic raspberries, raw honey, lemon juice, flax and spinach.

"Putting spinach in a smoothie is kind of a mom trick," Snyder admits. "Spinach has this amazing ability to just absorb into a smoothie and be flavorless, so we're boosting nutrition and fiber content without changing flavor. We're always looking for what tastes really wonderful and is really nutritious, so we can have something as a company where parents can finally say yes."

Snyder says that the most popular flavor is currently the Ninjaberry, which she describes as a "dark berry" treat with honey, lemon juice, and flax. Depending on the availability, the pop can contain any variation of blackberries, blueberries, strawberries, olallieberries and loganberries. At the commercial kitchen in the East Bay where the treats are prepared, she and her co-owners are also experimenting with fig pops and watermelon-basil pops to appear later in the summer.

Snyder says she, Schwartz, and Patel usually go through three or four iterations of pop-making and tasting in order to perfect a new flavor.

"We found that because we're using fresh ingredients, you really have to taste every batch," Snyder says. "We all have to familiarize our palates with what the pops taste like. Sometimes your lemons are more tart; sometimes the fruit is more sour."

After the establishment of a successful flavor, the pops go on sale at the Sunnyvale Farmers' Market and the Campbell Farmers' Market, both of which run from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. every Sunday. Snyder has applied to sell at the Mountain View Farmers' Market, which she says has a wait time of one year due to its popularity. Aside from selling at farmers' markets, Little Bee Pops offers event catering and currently sells its "Strawberry Avenger" ice pop at the Palo Alto grocery store Country Sun.

Strawberry Avenger, which contains organic strawberries, raw honey, lemon juice and flax, has a slightly tart yet refreshing strawberry flavor — similar to that of a frozen strawberry smoothie — that successfully masks any trace of flax seeds. According to Snyder, the pops will be sold at Ava's Downtown Market and Deli in Mountain View starting Thursday of this week.

Snyder estimates that the company makes 1,000 pops per week.

A seasonal item, ice pops can be sold only into October, Snyder says. She and the other owners have already begun looking into other organic, local products to sell during the rest of the year. Honey-sweetened jam is in the works for this fall.

“Melissa, our kitchen manager, is an avid jam maker,” Snyder says. “The honey-sweetened pops have such a wonderful flavor to them, so we thought, ‘Why not a honey-sweetened jam?’ We’re converting all our popsicle flavors into jam right now.”

Little Bee Pops has a light-hearted feel to its quest to support sustainable agriculture. Snyder’s business cards say “Queen of Pops” rather than CEO, while Schwartz and kitchen manager Patel are referred to on the website as Pop Goddess and Chief Whip-Cracker, respectively. Yet behind her playful nature, Snyder has a focused approach to sustainability in agriculture and healthy eating. With a background in nutritional anthropology, she is a co-founder of Full Circle Farm, an 11-acre educational nonprofit farm in Sunnyvale. This experience introduced Snyder to many of the farmers she now buys her pop ingredients from.

In order to avoid wasting produce, Snyder often buys the very ripe fruit necessary for pops from farmers who would not otherwise be able to sell the produce at the next market. Little Bee Pops works hard to ensure that its pops remain as sustainable and environmentally friendly as possible, she says.

“The most challenging part is just staying true to our mission, being local and trying to be sustainable,” Patel says.

Snyder stresses the need for a wider evaluation of our current agricultural and food supply system in order to reduce the use of chemical products and support local farms.

“We have this really profoundly broken food system,” Snyder says. “Part of repairing it is just eating healthier, but also creating a new network of supply.”

Little Bee Pops will be at Eagle Park in Mountain View on Friday, July 27, from 6 to 8 p.m. Eagle Park is located at 500 Franklin St. More information is at littlebeepops.com.

MOVIE REVIEWS

THE DARK KNIGHT RISES

(Century 16, Century 20) All the world's Gotham City in Christopher Nolan's ambitious Batman trilogy, which comes to an emphatic conclusion with "The Dark Knight Rises." The screenplay by Nolan and his brother Jonathan takes inspiration from "A Tale of Two Cities" and "Metropolis" (not Clark Kent's, Fritz Lang's) in depicting the levels of society: the 99 percent versus the 1 percent, the skyscrapers down to the sewers. The leitmotif of Nolan's well-orchestrated Batman saga is how a society, and an individual, responds to a fall. Batman has receded into billionaire Bruce Wayne (Christian Bale), a limping recluse. He faces two characters plucked from the pages of Batman comics. Fearsome terrorist Bane (Tom Hardy) was trained, like Batman, by Ra's al Ghul (Liam Neeson). Cat burglar Selina Kyle (Anne Hathaway) wants a "clean slate" in an internet age when information is immortal. The film delivers a whole lotta movie, with cast-of-thousands spectacle and giant-sized action that says "epic" almost as much as "blockbuster." The Nolans consider the issues of the day (there's a big Occupy Gotham theme); explore the role of legendary heroes in galvanizing the public; and labor mightily to ensure that how their Batman ends dovetails with 2005's "Batman Begins." Rated PG-13 for intense violence and action, sensuality and language. Two hours, 45 minutes. — P.C.

BEASTS OF THE SOUTHERN WILD

(Guild) Independent filmmaking doesn't come any better than this. Newcomer Quvenzhané Wallis delivers a riveting performance as the child trying to make sense of her world situated on the wrong side of a southern Louisiana levee. She and her ailing father (Dwight Henry) struggle to stay afloat in The Bathtub, a floodplain populated with odd characters and littered with ramshackle housing — a hurricane away from disaster. But the bayou community refuses to be displaced. Director Zeitlin's gift is the ability to pack social commentary within a unique voice and look. He and co-writer Lucy Alibar address the difficulties of preserving a people and their culture in post-Katrina Louisiana. The film's imagery has a haunting quality, especially once the characters become unmoored. "Beasts of the Southern Wild" is a must-see movie of rare vision. And the defiant brown eyes of Quvenzhané Wallis burn with a warrior spirit that you won't soon forget. Rated PG-13 for language, child imperilment, brief sensuality, disturbing images and thematic material. 1 hour, 33 minutes. — S.T.

THE INTOUCHABLES

still 2012. With its brash humor and emotional generosity, "The Intouchables" has crowd-pleaser written all over it, but there's no mistaking the queasy racial implications. Francois Cluzet ("Tell No One") plays Philippe, a quadriplegic white millionaire who unexpectedly plucks Senegalese immigrant Driss (Omar Sy) out of the Parisian ghetto to be a live-in home-care provider. Philippe — also a closet adventurer — appreciates Driss' irreverent insistence on prodding his boss out of his discomfort zone and into his need for speed and romance. Wildly popular in its native France, "The Intouchables" applies strict formula to an entirely reassuring story about improving one's life by coming out of one's shell and embracing new people and experiences. As told through bromance, it's a cinematic warm fuzzy if ever there was one, and the performances by Cluzet and Sy prove highly appealing if not irresistible. But here in America, where we invented this formula, audiences are likely to find it discomfitingly retrograde. Rated R for language and some drug use. One hour, 52 minutes. — P.C.

SAVAGES ★★1/2

(Century 20) Oliver Stone still believes in red-meat cinema. The proof is in "Savages," a hard-R crime drama that never treats the audience as juvenile. A war veteran named Chon (Taylor Kitsch) and his business partner and best friend Ben (Aaron Johnson) have a partnership that brings to mind the entrepreneurship of Ben and Jerry. The boutique product they export isn't gourmet ice cream but gourmet pot. Ben and Chon face a takeover by a Mexican cartel, but when the duo makes other plans, the cartel takes their surfer girl "O" (Blake Lively) hostage, setting off a war of wills. Salma Hayek's Elena, the cruel cartel mistress, doesn't suffer fools, but she's also a devoted, frustrated mother. Benicio Del Toro plays her top goon, Lado, both psychotic and sensitive. John Travolta is the slick, corrupt DEA agent. All three could be Oscar front-runners. The menage a trois at the heart of the film symbolizes American life: Naive consumer O is in bed with both damaged-goods muscle Chon and Buddhist businessman Ben, but they'll never want her as much as they want, need and envy each other. Rated R for violence, sexuality, nudity, drug use and language. Two hours, 10 minutes. — P.C.

THE AMAZING SPIDER-MAN

(Century 16, Century 20) Viewers will compare "The Amazing Spider-Man," to Sam Raimi's 2002 effort, and it could be argued that the two are on equal footing. In this comic book movie reboot, Andrew Garfield ("The Social Network") is high-school outcast Peter Parker, and Peter's love interest is Gwen Stacy (Emma Stone). Peter's parents left him with his uncle Ben (Martin Sheen) and aunt May (Sally Field) when he was a boy, and he still puzzles over their sudden departure. Peter discovers his father had been working with one-armed scientist Dr. Curt Connors (Rhys Ifans), and visits Connors at R&D company OsCorp. A genetically altered spider bites Peter, who starts showing enhanced strength and reflexes. He dubs himself Spider-Man, and takes to swinging over the city. The visual effects in "Amazing" are superior (including breathtaking scenes from Spider-Man's P.O.V.) and its villain, the Lizard, is one of the genre's most frightening. The battle scenes between Spider-Man and the Lizard are exceptional. Garfield is a terrific actor — better than Maguire — and Stone is a welcome upgrade over the dour Kirsten Dunst. Both familiar and fresh, it's a spectacle with enough thrills and humor to satisfy most fans. Rated PG-13 for action and violence. Two hours, 16 minutes. — T.H.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE File No. 7037.91244 Title Order No. 6216594 MIN No. 100013800906828328 APN 154-40-093 YOU ARE IN DEFAULT UNDER A DEED OF TRUST, DATED 09/20/06. UNLESS YOU TAKE ACTION TO PROTECT YOUR PROPERTY, IT MAY BE SOLD AT A PUBLIC SALE. IF YOU NEED AN EXPLANATION OF THE NATURE OF THE PROCEEDING AGAINST YOU, YOU SHOULD CONTACT A LAWYER. A public auction sale to the highest bidder for cash, cashier's check drawn on a state or national bank, check drawn by state or federal credit union, or a check drawn by a state or federal savings and loan association, or savings association, or savings bank specified in §5102 to the Financial code and authorized to do business in this state, will be held by duly appointed trustee. The sale will be made, but without covenant or warranty, expressed or implied, regarding title, possession, or encumbrances, to satisfy the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust. The undersigned Trustee disclaims any liability for any incorrectness of the property address or other common designation, if any, shown herein. Trustor(s): MAYRA SARMIENTO, AN UNMARRIED WOMAN Recorded: 09/29/06, as Instrument No. 19124873, of Official Records of SANTA CLARA County, California. Date of Sale: 08/09/12 at 10:00 AM Place of Sale: At the Market Street entrance to the Superior Courthouse, 190 North Market Street, San Jose, CA The purported property address is: 255 S. RENGSTORFF AVENUE, UNIT 93, MOUNTAIN VIEW, CA 94040 Assessor's Parcel No. 154-40-093 The total amount of the unpaid balance of the obligation secured by the property to be sold and reasonable estimated costs, expenses and advances at the time of the initial publication of the Notice of Sale is $298,720.26. If the sale is set aside for any reason, the purchaser at the sale shall be entitled only to a return of the deposit paid, plus interest. The purchaser shall have no further recourse against the beneficiary, the Trustor or the trustee. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call 877-484-9942 or visit this Internet Web site www.U.S.A-Foreclosure.com or www.Auction.com using the file number assigned to this case 7037.91244. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. Date: July 12, 2012 NORTHWEST TRUSTEE SERVICES, INC., as Trustee
