Tours for tots

CANTOR'S
NEW FAMILY
SUNDAYS FEATURE
SKETCHING IN THE GALLERIES, ART PROJECTS IN THE STUDIO, AND PINT-SIZED TOUR GROUPS

By Rebecca Wallace

Photographs by André Zandona

When art speaks to them, kids don't hold back. In the middle of a museum tour, a little girl looks up at a painting and shrieks, "Pretty!" When the tour moves to a display of Venetian glass vessels, other kids shout: "I like the red one!" and "That one looks like a coffee pot!"

Docent Rosalyn Voget remains calm. In this situation, being interrupted is hardly a bad thing. These kids are engaged and enthusiastic. There are also a lot of them.

The new Family Sunday programs at Stanford's Cantor Arts Center are only in their second weekend, and already the groups of attendees are so large that some of them need to be split in two. Family tours have been filling the main lobby, and young artists have been packing the drop-in art activities down in the Moorman Studio. Upstairs in the galleries, kids are drawing away with the colored pencils they've been given to sketch the art around them.

On the first Family Sunday, which happened to be Super Bowl Sunday, 80-some people showed up for the tours and more than 100 lined up at the art studio. Museum director Connie Wolf, who is spearheading the new initiative, was "overwhelmed" and pleased.

"It indicates that there is a huge hunger for (families) to find meaningful things to do together that provide new ways of thinking and educational, but not classroom-based," Wolf said. "There's a time to put all that technology aside and just be in the moment."

This past Sunday, more than 35 people were on hand for the 12:30 tour, with more showing up for later tours. Voget chose two display cases and a painting — Astley David Middleton Cooper's circa-1898 oil "Mrs. Stanford's Jewel Collection" — to show her young charges. The first case was filled with ornate Venetian glass vessels; the second, with colorful Chinese snuff bottles of glass, porcelain, crystal, silver. The common theme? Beautiful objects that you give people you love, often on Valentine's Day.

The kids seemed fascinated. With wide eyes, they peered at the bottles, chose their favorites and speculated what might have been kept in them. Mint. Lavender. "Spells," one suggested.

Family Sunday tours tie into the drop-in art activities held in the studio from 1 to 3 p.m. On this day artist Stephanie Crowell also centered the project on glass bottles. Small bottles had been glued to heavy paper, with children encouraged to be creative about what their bottles could hold — or what could be spilling out onto the paper. A crowd of kids and parents filled the room, the young artists descending on the crayons, construction paper, glue, red lacy hearts and "glitter station."

Crowell, an art teacher at the Community School of Music and Arts in Mountain View, supervised a table where kids squeezed colors out of droppers, getting to see what happened when primary hues met secondary ones.

Four-year-old Charlie was the picture of concentration as he carefully snipped away at a bit of blue construction paper. "Whatever ends up as the final product is the mystery," his father, Aidan Yeaw, said with a laugh.

This was the first time Charlie and his family had visited the Cantor, which is exactly what museum officials are hoping for:

new art-lovers, big and small. Or, as Wolf puts it, "the future of culture for our community."

Nearly all the new family programs are free: the family tours and drop-in art activities on Sunday afternoons, and the materials for gallery sketching and self-guided family tours, which are always available when the museum is open. (There will be a cost for the week-long summer art classes for kids.) Museum admission is also free, as is parking after 4 p.m. and on weekends.

The museum has had family programs in the past, but this new endeavor is more widespread, Wolf said. "I want to make sure that any time a family comes into the museum ... there is something you can pick up to do with children."

Wolf and her staff have done very little outreach on the program so far, wanting to see what kind of turnout they would get. They plan to expand outreach, including disseminating program brochures at several East Palo Alto locations.

As part of the new program, Wolf hired a new staff member last fall. Lauren Hahn brings an education background to her role as family-programs coordinator. A mother and self-described "museum junkie," she has a goal, she says, "to allow families respite in their busy lives."

Wolf also arranged more training for Cantor staff as a whole. When you expand family programs, there are a lot of things to think about: how museum guards should handle little hands touching the art, for example, or where strollers can go.

All seems to be running smoothly on this Sunday, especially upstairs, where families are sketching in the Sigall Gallery of early-20th-century works. In one corner, a girl and mom sit on the carpet while dad lies on his stomach, the family cozily drawing together in the company of Theodore Roszak's sunny-yellow abstract 1943 sculpture "Lighter than Air." It's all quiet, and it's all about the art. ■

■ INFORMATION

What: New Family Sunday art activities at Stanford's Cantor Arts Center

Where and when: Family half-hour tours start in the main lobby at 12:30, 1 and 1:30 p.m. Sundays, with drop-in art activities from 1 to 3 p.m. in the Moorman Studio on Sundays. Families can sign out art supplies for focused drawing activities in the gallery from 1 to 3 p.m. on Sundays.

On all days the Cantor is open (Wednesday through Sunday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Thursdays until 8 p.m.), museum patrons can pick up family guides for self-guided tours, and sign out colored pencils and paper for drawing in the galleries.

Curtain up on TheatreWorks' 44th season

LOUISA MAY ALCOTT, SHERLOCK HOLMES AND STEPHEN SONDHEIM GET STAR BILLING IN A NEW PROGRAM OF PLAYS AND MUSICALS

By Rebecca Wallace

If you mixed all the shows in TheatreWorks' new season into one giant stage gumbo, you might get something like this:

Koko the gorilla meets a dashing politician while stargazing at a desert estate. "Marry me a little," Koko signs, and Jo March runs in, pen in hand, to cover the unlikely love story. But who is the stranger in white driving by? Could this chap in the deerstalker help solve the mystery?

Fortunately, TheatreWorks thought it would be better to present its shows one at a time. This week, the veteran Peninsula group announced its 44th season. Five plays and three musicals, including one world premiere, will be performed in Palo Alto and Mountain View beginning in July.

Once again, the company is starting off with a brand-new work that was popular at the previous season's New Works Festival. This year, playwright Catherine Rush offers "The Loudest Man on Earth," which features the deaf actor Adrian Blue in a romantic comedy about a reclusive stage director who can't hear and a journalist who has a lot to say. As their romance blossoms, they encounter a wild bunch of characters including Ms. Koko. Opening night is July 13 at Palo Alto's Lucie Stern Theatre.

On Aug. 21, "Other Desert Cities," by Pulitzer Prize finalist Jon Robin Baitz, opens at the Mountain View Center for the Performing Arts. The show is a dysfunctional-family, home-for-the-holidays tale set on a movie star's desert estate. One family member is a writer with a juicy memoir.

The comedic political drama "Warrior Class" opens Oct. 12 at the Mountain View center. Playwright Kenneth Lin centers his story on a politician and son of Chinese immigrants who seems to be rising high as "The Republican Obama" — until scandal rears its head.

Next, TheatreWorks goes all Broadway musical with "Little Women," penned by Allan Knee (book), Mindi Dickstein (lyrics) and Jason Howland (music) after the classic Louisa May Alcott novel. The show opened on Broadway in 2005 and earned Sutton Foster a Tony nomination for her portrayal of Jo. It opens at the Lucie Stern on Dec. 7.

A tale of a pioneering woman astronomer follows, in Lauren Gunderson's "Silent Sky." It's a man's world at the turn of the 20th century, which means challenges ensue. Opening night is Jan. 18 at the Mountain View center.

It's off to the Caribbean (and the Lucie Stern) on March 8 with "Once on This Island," with book and lyrics by Lynn Ahrens and music by Stephen Flaherty, the team that created "Ragtime" and "Lucky Stiff." Peasant girl Ti Moune has her life upended when an aristocrat in white races by.

A send-up of Sherlock Holmes follows, with "Hound of the Baskervilles," adapted by Steven Canny and John Nicholson. Three actors, dozens of roles and one peculiar dog. Opening night is April 5 at the Mountain View center.

The season closes with a lesser-known musical from one of the theater's greats. Stephen Sondheim's "Marry Me a Little" is about lonely young New Yorkers singing about their dreams. The songs include many numbers that didn't make it into other Sondheim shows, such as "Can That Boy Foxtrot" (not in "Follies"). The musical opens June 7 at the Mountain View center.

TheatreWorks season subscriptions are now on sale ($99-$492), with single tickets on offer starting June 5. Go to theatreworks.org or call 650-463-1960. ▀
