Best local spots for the authentic Turkish coffee experience

■ FOOD FEATURE

I grew up with the delectable smell of Turkish coffee. My mother made it every evening in the small kitchen of my childhood home in Istanbul.

I had my first romance when I fell in love with coffee after tasting the highly fragrant, strong, bitter-yet-smooth flavor of a cup of foamy Turkish coffee. It was the first thing I learned to cook at age 9, and when I came to the United States, the traditional coffee set was the first thing I put in my suitcase. Now, if I ever attempted to simplify this complex, aromatic delight into a couple of words, I would say Turkish coffee is a wealth of tradition squeezed into a tiny porcelain cup.

Coffee was introduced to Europeans by Turks during the Ottoman Empire in the 17th century, and the word “coffee” derives from the Turkish word, “kahve.” It’s no wonder that Turkish coffee bears so much importance not only to Turks but also to coffee-lovers around the globe. An example of complex and flavorful Turkish cuisine, Turkish coffee (Turk kahvesi) is a cultural hallmark that comes with an abundance of tradition and history.

From the way its coffee beans are ground to the elegant equipment with which it is served, Turkish coffee needs great care in its preparation. Galip Vural, owner of Olympus Caffé & Bakery and Ephesus restaurant on Castro Street in Mountain View, said it is crucial that the coffee beans are ground to a very fine powder. Turkish coffee brand Kurukahveci Mehmet Efendi is one of the essential ingredients of making traditional coffee, he said. Vural orders it from international stores in the area to make his Turkish coffee ($2.95 a cup) at Olympus.

Vural uses a traditional copper pot, or “cezve,” that he brought from Turkey to brew the coffee. He uses one teaspoon of coffee per person. He then adds one Turkish-coffee cupful of water (about 2.2 ounces) and stirs the mixture. Sugar is added before brewing Turkish coffee, Vural noted, and can be made plain, medium-sweet or sweet. For medium-sweetness, he adds one Turkish-teaspoon (equivalent to a demitasse spoon) of granulated sugar and stirs it in before putting the pot on the stove.

The key to the recipe is to make sure the water is at room temperature, said Ibrahim Ulas, the owner of Galata Bistro, a Turkish restaurant in Menlo Park. In order to make quality Turkish coffee, all that’s needed is to put sugar, water and coffee into the pot, stir it and put it on the stove at a very low temperature, Ulas said.

“When the coffee starts boiling, it starts rising up. When it comes to the top, it means it’s cooked, and you just take it off the fire immediately, otherwise it just overflows and ruins the coffee,” he said.

The foam on top of Turkish coffee is what makes it special, he said.

“When someone brings you Turkish coffee, if there is no foam on top, it means it’s not good,” Ulas said. “You tell them, ‘You know what? I want to have another one.’”

Galata Bistro’s Turkish coffee ($3.75) comes with a thick layer of foam on top, served in a white porcelain cup that’s placed into traditional Ottoman coffee service with metal-capped cups and plates. It is accompanied by a piece of Turkish delight (lokum)—a small cubes of a sweet confection traditionally made of syrup and nuts—that compliments the strong and bitter taste of the coffee.

Although this ornate metal equipment is not necessary (porcelain cups made for Turkish coffee should suffice), it is quite popular in Turkish restaurants. Anatolian Kitchen, a Turkish and Kurdish restaurant in Palo Alto, serves Turkish coffee ($4) using the same type of elegant coffee set. Owner Dino Tekdemir, who is originally from Diyarbakir in southeastern Turkey, said he brought it from his hometown.

Like many Turkish chefs, Tekdemir prepares Turkish coffee in two phases. After he puts the pot on the stove and the coffee boils once, he takes it off the heat, and scoops the foam into the coffee cups. Then, he puts the pot back on the stove and waits for it to boil one last time. The trick, Tekdemir said, is to take the pot off the stove at the moment that it boils and starts rising.

Several other local establishments serve authentic Turkish coffee, including Cafe 220 in Palo Alto ($2.75) and Cafe Nur in Los Altos ($2.95).

Traditional Turkish coffee rarely includes any spices. However, in some Middle Eastern countries, there are variations, such as including Arabic coffee grounds and spices such as cardamom. The resulting brew is often more bitter and stronger than the Turkey-style Turkish coffee. Some local places that serve up Turkish coffee with a twist are Mediterranean Wraps ($2.75) on California Avenue in Palo Alto, which uses Arabic coffee brand Najjar; Mediterranean Grill House ($3.25) on Castro Street; and Sufi Coffee Shop ($4.95), also in Mountain View, which offers Persian-style Turkish coffee.

Other restaurants in the area that serve coffee that's more Turkish-inspired than traditionally Turkish are Oren's Hummus on University Avenue ($3) and Beet Cafe on Page Mill Road ($4), both in Palo Alto. These establishments offer Americanized versions (machine-brewed coffee with non-Turkish coffee grounds and milk and sugar served on the side). Beet Cafe's variation, served in a medium-sized paper cup, though strikingly different from what you'd find in Turkey, is quite foamy and tastes surprisingly good.

Making foamy Turkish coffee and serving it without spilling is often seen as a test of one's culinary skills in Turkish culture. In pre-marriage family rituals where the woman's father is asked for permission, the bride-to-be must offer Turkish coffee to all of the guests. A more subtle test applies to the prospective groom, who might be served coffee made with salt instead of sugar. If he can drink it without complaining, it's an indicator of whether he is worthy of the lady's love.

Another Turkish coffee tradition is fortune-telling. Inside the coffee-stained porcelain walls of the tiny cups lies a wealth of fortunes, according to tradition. Those who want learn their fortunes put the coffee plate on top of the cup and flip it over. Once the residual coffee grounds are dry, the fortune can be told.

Vural said that every weekend, Turkish regulars come to Olympus Caffe & Bakery and hold fortune-telling sessions. One of the regular guests is known to tell fortunes that eventually come true, he said.

More than anything, coffee fortune-telling is often seen as a conversation extender, a way to bond on a deeper level—one of the many rituals that make drinking Turkish coffee such a rich and unique experience. As Galata Bistro's Ulas points out, a famous Turkish proverb states that "one cup of Turkish coffee is to be remembered for 40 years."

To make Turkish coffee at home, the traditional brand for Turkish coffee grounds, Kurukahveci Mehmet Efendi, is available at stores including Baraka Halal Market (952 West El Camino Real, Sunnyvale), Flavour Shop (524 Octavia St., San Francisco), and Foods & More (1650 Las Plumas Ave., San Jose). Traditional equipment, such as cups and coffee pots, can be found online. ■

SPY TV'S 'THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E.' HITS THE BIG SCREEN

★★ 1/2 (Century 16, Century 20)

One of the bona fide pop culture sensations of the mid-'60s, along with The Beatles and "Batman," NBC's spy series "The Man from U.N.C.L.E." proposed an international law-enforcement agency, the U.N. of espionage. Napoleon Solo (a silkysuave Robert Vaughn) and Illya Kuryakin (a smoldering David McCallum), the former a brash American and the latter a tightly-wound Russian, ribbed each other while teaming up weekly (Cold War be damned) to save the world — and, usually, a dizzy damsel — from megalomaniacal guest-star villains. James Bond creator Ian Fleming famously contributed Solo's name (and virtually nothing else), and since TV's answer to Bond arrived in 1964, the same year as "Goldfinger," "U.N.C.L.E." enjoyed a perfect storm of spy mania.

Now we have a version directed by Guy Ritchie ("Sherlock Holmes") and starring Henry "Superman" Cavill and Armie "The Lone Ranger" Hammer. Brit Cavill's American accent and Hammer's Russian one contribute to a mannered stiltedness that drains "U.N.C.L.E." of its easy-goes-it escapism and effortless cool. Ritchie and Lionel Wigram's script honors the original characters just fine, but the leads are lukewarm. With his cocked eyebrows, smirks and peacocking strut, Cavill overworks it; containing Illya's anger issues, Hammer succeeds in being somewhat more subtle if lacking in McCallum's charisma.

One might well call this prequel reboot "U.N.C.L.E. Begins": Set in 1963, the film tells the tale of Solo and Kuryakin's first meeting, on opposite sides of the Cold War divide. Whizzing around Checkpoint Charlie in a sequence that culminates in an escape over the Berlin Wall, the two compete for the prize of Gaby Teller (Alicia Vikander of "Ex Machina"), the daughter of a sought-after German rocket scientist.

Despite the picture's throwback spy sophistication, the mostly unmemorable action sequences suffer from editing that evokes carsickness, and the split-the-difference joke-serious tone errs — in keeping with its director — on the side of fashion-conscious, cosmopolitan and smug. In a word, the movie is "stylish," which is better than the alternative.

It's also mostly empty, though it has its moments, and mostly the amorous ones: the teasing chemistry of Vikander and Hammer and the bromantic moments when Solo first chooses and later confirms friendship with Kuryakin. Along with welcome supporting turns by Elizabeth Debicki as a formidable femme fatale, Sylvester Groth as a craven sadist and Hugh Grant as spy-boss Waverly, there's almost enough to push the watchable "U.N.C.L.E." into recommended territory. Instead, it's a near-miss. Rated PG-13 for action violence, some suggestive content and partial nudity. One hour, 56 minutes. — Peter Canavese

Is lease's bedbug addendum legal?

Edited by
Anky van Deursen

Q I have lived in my apartment for just over three months and I thought everything was going well until last week. That is when I started noticing itchy bumps on my body in the morning. When I showed them to my friend, he told me I had bedbugs. When I contacted my manager and showed her the bites on my arms, she refused to accept responsibility and produced a "Bedbug Addendum" that I had signed as part of my lease. She said that this addendum completely waived my right to hold the management responsible for any bedbug problem. Then she said I would have to pay for professional extermination services at my own expense.

Does this Bedbug Addendum relieve my landlord of all responsibility for my bedbug infestation? I have had a positive relationship with my on-site manager. She doesn't complain if I am a day late with rent and she previously arranged to have my leaking sink fixed. However, the bedbug bites combined with a huge potential extermination bill is really stressing me.

A A landlord has a duty to provide habitable premises to all tenants including you. Under California Civil Code 1953, a tenant cannot be required to waive the landlord's duty of habitability, regardless of whether the purported waiver is incorporated in the rental agreement. California Civil Code section 1941.1 includes rental premises free from "rodents" and "vermin" within the landlord's duty of habitability. In our opinion, bedbugs fall squarely within the definition of vermin.

On the other hand, tenants also have duties, including the duty to report habitability problems promptly, so that bigger and more expensive problems can be avoided. The tenant also has a duty to avoid causing the habitability problem. Therefore, if you brought the bedbugs into the unit or you noticed the infestation and delayed reporting it, you could be held responsible for the infestation.

You should read this addendum to your rental agreement very carefully. If the language purports to waive any of the duties imposed on the landlord under California law, it should not be enforceable. If the language merely reflects your legal responsibility and that of the landlord as outlined above, it is "legal" but it cannot be used to assert a waiver of the landlord's duty to you.

Given your manager's response to your complaint, make sure you have stated your complaint in writing and reference the date you verbally notified her, in order to document that you met your duty of notice, and in the same writing, request that landlord honor its duty to promptly remedy the infestation. If she continues to refuse, contact your local fair housing or mediation program, or Project Sentinel.

Project Sentinel provides landlord-tenant dispute resolution and fair-housing services in Northern California, including rental housing mediation programs in Mountain View, Los Altos and Palo Alto. Call 650-856-4062 for dispute resolution or 650-321-6291 for fair housing, email info@housing.org or visit housing.org.
