Open 'round the clock, local donut shops serve as community gathering spots

FOOD FEATURE

It's 6:30 a.m. at Chuck's Donuts in Redwood City. Most eateries are just beginning to open their doors, if they're open at all at that hour. But when you step inside Chuck's Donuts, it's already bustling.

Customers rush in and out while others find places to sit with their laptops and newspapers. Donuts are sitting on cafeteria-style tables, served up in red plastic baskets, and often accompanied by a cup of coffee. The staff works quickly behind the counter, taking orders, pouring coffee and bringing out fresh trays of donuts.

Based on the activity level, one might think that Chuck's has already been open for hours, which is absolutely correct. The shop never closes, operating on a 24-hour schedule.

Chuck's is one of few local establishments that is open around the clock. No-frills places like Chuck's and Happy Donuts in Palo Alto have long been neighborhood hangouts for all kinds of clientele, from hungry high-school students to blue-collar workers to those who are simply fond of donuts, at any hour of the day. As donut enthusiast Greyson Horst told a reporter, "I'm 99 percent vegan, 1 percent donut. I can't resist them." ❏

Lippa's lively 'Party'

THEATREWORKS HOSTS U.S. PREMIERE OF ANDREW LIPPA REVIEW

By Kevin Kirby

Now playing at the Mountain View Center for the Performing Arts, "The Life of the Party: A Celebration of the Songs of Andrew Lippa" is very much what one would expect from the title: a polished, fast-paced, thoroughly enjoyable musical revue featuring the work of the composer/lyricist behind such musicals as "The Addams Family," "The Wild Party," "Big Fish," "A Little Princess," "John & Jen" and more.

What sets "The Life of the Party" apart from similar tributes to other Broadway tune-smiths is the presence of Lippa himself. Not only does Lippa host his own party — introducing songs and threading the show together with affable banter — he also is one of the show's four cast members. And just in case singing, dancing, and emceeing aren't enough, he joins the band from time to time on piano or ukulele.

Originally staged in London by director David Babani (who co-conceived the show with Lippa), "The Life of the Party" comes to Mountain View under the aegis of TheatreWorks. Babani is again at the helm, and he has brought the bulk of the design team with him. Lights, set, costumes and choreography are all the work of his London colleagues. The notable exception is TheatreWorks' resident musical director William Liberatore, who leads the near-flawless on-stage combo from the piano.

If this revue boasts impeccable production values — and it does — it also boasts an exceptional cast. Two of the performers (Lippa and tenor Damian Humbley) were with the show in London, while the other two (mezzo Sally Ann Triplett and soprano Teal Wicks) are new to the material.

Lippa is a strong singer who holds his own admirably well in the dance sequences, and his rendition of "You are Here" from the oratorio "I Am Harvey Milk" is both passionate and controlled. Humbley goes from charmingly kooky as the Addams Family's Uncle Fester to gloriously profane as a power-hungry nun named Sister Severia (in the song "Christ Almighty" from "Asphalt Beach"), and he belts the hell out of the gin-fueled dithyramb "Let Me Drown" (from "The Wild Party").

But it is Lippa and Humbley's female counterparts who most often steal the show. Wicks combines seemingly effortless vocals with a fearless physicality. This is most obvious in the "Wild Party" sequence and in "Cindy," a cabaret number that imagines Cinderella as a peppy dominatrix. But her best performance may be the subtler "Pulled," in which the gloomy Wednesday Addams struggles against the euphoria of teenage infatuation.

KEVIN BERNE

"Life of the Party," a celebration of the work of composer Andrew Lippa, has its West Coast premiere in a TheatreWorks production.

As Wicks sings, we can see the ambivalence writ large in her body; by the end of the song she appears nearly drawn and quartered by her inner turmoil.

Though Triplett has to finesse a handful of high notes throughout the evening, she is a consummate actress, whether selling Morticia Addams's drollery in "Just Around the Corner" or lobbing lustful asides at audience members in "An Old-Fashioned Love Story" ("The Wild Party"). When she finishes the pensive stand-alone ballad "Love Somebody Now," Lippa jokes about creating a Kickstarter campaign to put the performance on CD. He should stop joking and make it happen.

Performances and production values aside, this sort of career-spanning retrospective also provides us with an opportunity to consider the songwriter's oeuvre as a whole. What generalizations can we draw about Lippa's 20-plus years as a composer and lyricist?

In what is perhaps an unfortunate move, Lippa kicks off the show by giving us an impossible standard against which to judge his work: Broadway icon Stephen Sondheim. Sitting alone at the piano, Lippa sings an autobiographical piece ("Marshall Levin") which traces his own musical theatre career back to his adolescent discovery of Sondheim's "Sweeney Todd." But for all that he may idolize the man's work, dropping Sondheim's name at the top of the revue simply invites a comparison that may not be to Lippa's advantage.

Lippa is too often content with obvious, overworked rhymes (as when he declares, in "Marshall Levin," that "One sweet afternoon / We were perfectly in tune"). His melodies are pleasant but seldom remarkable, and too many of his songs wander into a generic feel-good territory — seemingly more interested in uplifting the listener than in advancing a plot point or revealing the inner life of a specific character.

■ INFORMATION

What: "The Life of the Party," a musical revue presented by TheatreWorks

Where: Mountain View Center for the Performing Arts, 500 Castro St., Mountain View

When: Through Sept. 18, Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m., Wednesdays at 2 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., Thursdays-Fridays at 8 p.m., Saturdays at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m., Sundays at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m.

Cost: Tickets range from $19-$80.

Info: Go to theatreworks.org or call 650-463-1960.

To be fair, this last impression is likely exacerbated by the act of choosing revue-ready songs that are easily understood outside their original shows. By selecting numbers like "Live Out Loud" and "Spread a Little Joy" (from "A Little Princess" and the unproduced "Betty Boop," respectively), Lippa and Babani are presenting the composer/lyricist at his most saccharine, detached from any theatrical context that might justify the affirmational lyrics.

In general, Lippa is most successful when darker stories and characters force him to work in opposition to his apparent sentimental streak. Numbers from "The Addams Family" are deliciously macabre, and excerpts from "The Wild Party" present the nightlife of the pre-crash 1920s at its most debauched. The aforementioned "Christ Almighty" and "Cindy" also highlight Lippa at his Tom Lehrer-esque best.

The real question, of course, is not whether the songs are perfect, or groundbreaking, or touched with ephemeral genius.

Don't 'Sully' his good name

CLINT EASTWOOD STRAINS TO PAD THE 'MIRACLE ON THE HUDSON'

★★ (Century 16 and 20)

It's appropriate that the title of Clint Eastwood's new film "Sully" can refer both to national-hero airline pilot Chesley "Sully" Sullenberger and to a verb meaning to attack someone's good name and to try to ruin a reputation. You see, the film has been constructed to make Sully not only triumph over crisis in the skies but also those meanies who would dare to question his choices under pressure.

Billed as "the untold story of the Miracle on the Hudson" — that is, Sullenberger's expert 2009 water landing of US Airways Flight 1549 on the Hudson River after dual engine failure — "Sully" does a fine job of recreating the short flight and its immediate aftermath as 155 souls evacuate. But that's the "told story" part. The so-called "untold story" is essentially nonsense, suggesting that burgeoning air-safety entrepreneur Sullenberger (oh, the irony!) had to fear the judgment of the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB), especially before a climactic public hearing.

The struggle is real for screenwriter Todd Komarnicki in telling this "untold story," purportedly based on Sullenberger's own book (with Jeffrey Zaslow) "Highest Duty: My Search for What Really Matters." Even at 95 minutes, "Sully" is visibly padded, with two useless flashbacks to Sully's years of flying experience (his four decades of flight experience get mentioned in dialogue, three times), repetitive scenes of Sullenberger (Tom Hanks) and co-pilot Jeff Skiles (Aaron Eckhart) fretting over the NTSB inquisition, and a second depiction of the flight to afford a slightly different perspective.

The film makes the good point that Sullenberger didn't pull off the "miracle" alone: he was aided by cool-headed flight crew and air-traffic controllers, ferry and tourist boat rescuers, and reasonably orderly passengers. Komarnicki and Eastwood play the note hard that "the best of New York came together" in a post-9/11 feel-good survival story of can-do New York heroism (a colleague tells Sully, "Y'know, it's been a while since New York had news this good. Especially with an airplane in it"). If only those nasty investigators and (cough) regulators would stop telling salt-of-the-Earth American heroes their business!

The investigation into the flight — first in closed-door sessions and then in that photogenic public hearing with a crowd of extras and big video screens — absurdly plays out in hostile, sinister tones despite numerous scenes that show the media circus (not to mention the survivors and ground-level New Yorkers) hailing Sully as a hero (in a laughably blunt bit of scripting, Sully actually says, "I'm overwhelmed by all this attention"). You can feel each gear turn in the script machinery to turn the screws on Sully. It's a false premise for suspense, amusingly underlined by Sully's wife Lorraine suggesting that they could well lose their house if Sully is found at fault ("We need you flying!").

Of course, Warner Brothers, Eastwood and Hanks are really hoping you'll forget that investigations are obligatory, and that public relations exist and generally preclude publicly dressing down heroes. Hanks is demonstrably better than this material: if only he had a Hitchcock around so Hanks could make his "Vertigo" instead of a dutiful product that plays like a 1980s TV "Movie of the Week" somehow elevated to A-list Oscar bait (and shot almost entirely with Digital IMAX cameras). Not every Big News Story needs to be trotted out as a movie. Maybe there was a worthy way to tell Sully's story outside of his 208-second trial by air and water, but making Sully a crusader in a hearing room isn't it.

Rated PG-13 for some peril and brief strong language. One hour, 35 minutes.

Are they entertaining? The answer to that is a definite yes. There is no doubt that Lippa's career warrants a revue, nor that he has earned his place among the post-Sondheim generation of composers and lyricists who have contributed to the resurgence of American musical theater in the 21st century. ▣

500 Help Wanted

Computer Systems Associate
Embarcadero Media is looking for an Information Technology professional to join our IT team to support and manage our Windows and Mac infrastructure.

We are looking for a person who can work as part of a support team, troubleshooting hardware and software, while providing Windows server administration and network management. You would provide computer support for both of our Bay Area locations (Palo Alto and Pleasanton) based in our main Palo Alto office.

This is an entry-level position, but an ideal candidate would have helpdesk and troubleshooting experience. We want that special someone who is technically savvy with excellent people skills. Windows server administration would be a huge plus.

Your own transportation is a necessity. Mileage is reimbursed. This is a full-time, benefited position.

Please email your resume and cover letter to Frank Bravo, Director of Information Technology, with "Computer Systems Associate" in the subject line.

Embarcadero Media is an independent, award-winning news organization, with more than 35-years publishing.
