THE WATER BUFFALO PRODUCTS ARE TRULY 'FARM-TO-TABLE'

Kal Morsey is obsessed with water buffalo. The Egyptian native, one-time commodities trader and long-time Los Altos Hills resident wants you to be obsessed with water buffalo too, namely with their creamy, protein-rich milk.

Since coming to the United States decades ago, Morsey said he has been “astonished” that Americans partake mindlessly of what he sees as inferior dairy products from bovines. Morsey seems genuinely sad for everyone outside of Asia, India, the Middle East and Italy who might never know the pleasures of water buffalo-milk products, including very low levels of lactose. Morsey embarked on a years-long crusade, investing millions of dollars along the way, to establish one of the largest water buffalo herds in the United States. He bought a 50-acre farm outside Sacramento, where more than 300 buffalo must be coddled to ensure milk production. Finally, after clearing the mountains of regulations to operate a dairy, four months ago he opened Morsey's Farmhouse in downtown Los Altos, where every dish is made with products from the buffalo farm.

During a telephone interview, Morsey, a first-time restaurateur, seemed to question his own sanity a few times. But the result of his passion is an ambitious and unique addition to Main Street. That said, many palates may not discern a marked difference between a good seabass filet cooked in water buffalo butter and the same fish prepared in butter from a Guernsey cow. I found most of Morsey's offerings to be excellent, but my hunch is most diners won't leave the restaurant wondering where water buffalo have been all their life.

Morsey and his business partner/wife Yulia, a native of Russia, created the 3,500-square-foot restaurant to showcase “everything the water buffalo can do.” In addition to serving breakfast, lunch and dinner, Morsey's also is a gelateria and offers a small selection of baked goods. From the “grab and go” section at the front of the restaurant, you can pick up a pint of thick, sweet buffalo milk ($5) or a container of ultra-fresh mozzarella di bufala ($14). Breakfast and lunch is ordered at the counter; dinner is full table service.

Some of the wait staff is still learning the ropes and a few of the entrées I tried fell short, but most of what I sampled over the course of two dinners and one lunch was very well executed, despite occurring not long after the sudden departure of the restaurant's executive chef. My second dinner revealed a pared-down menu, with at least 30 percent fewer appetizers and entrees as compared to my first visit a few weeks earlier. Growing pains are still in evidence, but there is a lot of

Located at the former site of Main Street Cafe, Morsey's is airy, bright and white. The long, narrow dining room, with four-top tables in regimented lines, calls to mind a Scandinavian cafeteria: clean-lined and utilitarian but lacking warmth and ambiance, especially at dinner. It is not an unpleasant atmosphere, but the long dining room, more like a dining hall, doesn't feel particularly convivial or inviting.

Once we received our appetizers, however, the focus was all on the food. A warm kale salad ($12) of dinosaur kale sautéed in buffalo milk ghee, was perfectly tender without a hint of bitterness. The savory-sweet salad was studded with golden raisins and bacon lardons, then topped with shaved Parmesan cheese and crispy shallots. A sherry vinaigrette added the perfect zing. The moules frites ($17) were top quality Prince Edward Island mussels and the pink, delicately creamy sauce was the best I've ever had with mussels, made with red curry, garlic, white wine, fennel and, of course, buffalo cream. I enjoyed the remains at the bottom of the bowl like a fine soup with my glass of Chevalier de Novato ($8). The accompanying frites arrived hot and crispy with what tasted like house-made ketchup.

The burrata di bufala ($18), a creamy, soft Italian cheese, is one of Morsey's signature appetizers, probably the freshest you will find outside of Italy. A jiggling dome of soft mozzarella blended with cream is served atop small heirloom tomatoes and dressed lightly with balsamic, basil and salt.

The wild mushroom tart ($13) was rustic and enticing with truffle béchamel, forest mushrooms, microgreens and a slather of roasted peach gastrique.

We were barely three-quarters of the way through our appetizers when the friendly but oblivious servers advanced with our entrées (this happened during my second dinner as well). We had to ask them to hold off, a situation that likely resulted in my friend's New York strip ($38) spending too much time under the heat lamps. Even had it not been overdone, the rather paltry cut of meat (not from water buffalo) was still unremarkable: too lightly unseasoned and the blue cheese demi-glace did little to add interest. All four of us at the table agreed that the small side of fried Brussels sprouts was the standout item on the plate. However, my wild mushroom ravioli ($24), made rich and creamy with a porcini buffalo cream sauce, was earthy and delicious. Caramelized shallots and truffle oil took this dish to the edge of decadence, but the entrée stopped just short of being too rich.

The New Zealand crispy-skinned salmon filet ($30) was succulent, if a touch bland. On my first visit, the salmon was being served with a parsnip puree, grilled stone fruit, yam chips and parsley pesto. When I ordered the dish on my second visit, it arrived only with three yam chips (delicious) and a small mound of lightly dressed lettuce. At that price point, the lack of accompaniments was disappointing.

Where the New York strip comes from boring old American cattle, Morsey's buffalo burger ($20) is just that: a buffalo meat patty served with Morsey's mozzarella di bufala. It was a hefty and juicy burger, but neither I nor my dining companions noticed much difference in taste or texture as compared to a traditional burger.

Most of Morsey's desserts are of the dairy variety: dulce de leche ($6.50), crema Catalana ($6) and triple-chocolate cheesecake ($6). We tried two flavors of the buffalo milk gelato ($3.75 for a single scoop) and had completely different experiences. My husband's mango gelato was creamy and flavorful. My scoop of coffee was strangely chalky.

Overall, diners may well be having similarly divergent experiences here for a few more months as this ambitious project continues to find its footing, but there is a lot to love about Morsey's labor of love — a farm-to-table restaurant in the purest sense. ▣

Existential crisis

'FIRST REFORMED' LOOKS AT WHAT AILS CHURCHES, THE HUMAN PSYCHE

★★★1/2 (Aquarius)

For over four decades, Paul Schrader has been the foremost cinematic chronicler of dysfunctional American masculinity. As the screenwriter of "Taxi Driver," "Raging Bull" and "The Mosquito Coast" — and the writer-director of "Hardcore," "American Gigolo," and "Affliction" — Schrader has examined the despairing male illusions of power and control in a cold, indifferent universe, the blind alley of faith and the violent lashing out that accompanies realization. At 70, the writer-director has reached something like an apotheosis with his themes in "First Reformed," set in and around a small Dutch Reform church in upstate New York.

The Rev. Ernst Toller (Ethan Hawke) serves both as pastor and primary tour guide of his church, a tourist destination for its Dutch Colonial architecture and for being a stop on the Underground Railroad. The church's 250th anniversary celebration and reconsecration is coming up in two months, and largely under the auspices of nearby parent church Abundant Life, run by Jeffers (Cedric Kyles, a.k.a. Cedric the Entertainer), the pastor. Although the lonely Toller has his own trouble — what he calls "petty ailments" but most would call alarming symptoms — he undertakes the concerns of a young expectant couple: Michael (Philip Ettinger) and Mary (Amanda Seyfried).

Michael has come to believe he shouldn't bring a child into a world doomed to environmental destruction and its attendant social chaos. Noting we're past "the tipping point," Michael also has begun gravitating to eco-terrorism, and Mary implores Toller for whatever counsel or comfort he can provide.

Schrader has surprises, even shocks, in store but cradles them in the emotional logic of characters in extremis. By encountering Michael and Mary's domestic crisis, Toller cracks open his own existential crisis and, in his own way, becomes radicalized by what he finds. He must take hard looks at the state of the world and the environment and his own faith, and what they mean in the context of what he's preaching, or peddling, to his flock. Toller must also square his association with a condescending megachurch (Toller's church gets dubbed "the souvenir shop" while Abundant Life gets described as "more of a company than a church"), one that's in bed with a polluting oil company.

"Life is experiencing the tension of hope and despair," Toller counsels. He also confesses to finding the tug-of-war between faith and faithlessness "exhilarating," but that engagement risks radicalizing him just at the moment he's expected meekly to double down on tradition and relinquish his control. Are we past pushing envelopes? Should we be stepping over lines? Taking this road to Calvary with Toller, the audience must examine its own thoughts and feelings about an ailing planet, the meaning of faith, mortality and apocalypse, and what constitutes sane or reasoned responses to all of the above.

As ever, lapsed Calvinist Schrader examines emotional repression as well as our American brand of social repression, and whenever Schrader is allowed to be uncompromising, the results indeed prove "exhilarating." Resonant performances help, but it's Schrader's on-point filmmaking — a nouveau spin on the spiritual films, character studies and transcendental style of cinematic old masters like Bergman and Bresson — that functions as what Toller calls "another form of prayer." *Rated R for some disturbing violent images. MOVIE REVIEWS

SOLO: A STAR WARS STORY ★★★1/2

When it comes to "Solo: A Star Wars Story," Star Wars fanatics stand a better chance of having a good time than those who don't know a wampa from a bantha. It could be said that "Solo" is fan service in search of a movie. It safely fits the brand, but that's the problem: It's deathly afraid of thinking outside of the box. So, yeah, fans will get what they came for: a swaggering young schemer named Han (Alden Ehrenreich) who makes his name, befriends a Wookiee named Chewbacca (Joonas Suotamo), does the Kessel Run and acquires the Millennium Falcon from Lando Calrissian (Donald Glover). Ehrenreich is just fine, but unlike Chris Pine's engagingly loose take on William Shatner's Captain Kirk, Ehrenreich's performance feels weighted with baggage, scared straight by Ford, three directors and an acting coach. What's left is swagger and a smile but not a whole lot of soul. Still, Lucasfilm can be pleased that the film resembles the Millennium Falcon: a bit beat up, perhaps, but it scrapes by in a tight spot. Rated PG-13 for sequences of sci-fi action/violence. Two hours, 15 minutes. —P.C.

CITY OF MOUNTAIN VIEW

COURTESY NOTICE COMMUNITY MEETING

TERRA BELLA VISIONING PLAN COMMUNITY WORKSHOP

Saturday, June 02, 2018, 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the City of Mountain View Senior Center (266 Escuela Ave)

TERRA BELLA VISIONING

The City is developing Visioning and Guiding Principles Plan for the Terra Bella area to help define a vision for future change in the area. The plan will include development principles which will provide a foundation to guide review of future development projects in the area.

The City welcomes your participation in the first Terra Bella Visioning and Guiding Principles Plan Community Workshop. The workshop will include an overview of the plan area and existing conditions. Workshop participants will provide input on their vision for future development in the plan area, including preferred location and types of new development, and desired public improvements.

A meeting agenda and additional materials for the workshop will be available on the City's Terra Bella Visioning Plan website at: <http://www.mountainview.gov/depts/comdev/planning/activeprojects/terrabella.asp>

A second Terra Bella Visioning Plan community workshop is planned for August 2018 that will build on input from this workshop. Community members are encouraged to participate in both workshops. More details on the second workshop will be available in July 2018.

My clients always want to know what is happening in the real estate market.

As part of your financial team, it is my responsibility to keep you informed of the general and specific real estate market conditions.

I have all the current market trends, conditions and statistics.

If it's happening, I know about it.

Houses are selling!

95% of my business is referrals from past clients and previous clients.

Clients trust me to help them make decisions.

Want to make the right financial decision?

I will guide you to success.
