LOCAL TEAMS TAKE A PAGE OUT OF 'HARRY POTTER' TO COMPETE AT FANTASTICAL SPORT

By Magali Gauthier

Quidditch games aren't just played in "Harry Potter" books — they're taking place at Mountain View and Palo Alto parks.

The Bay Area Breakers and the Silicon Valley Vipers are two community adult teams that practice the magical sport at Shoreline Athletics Fields and nearby recreational spaces. Last week, both clubs competed in the 12th annual US Quidditch Cup in Round Rock, Texas.

The real world version of the game combines elements of dodgeball, rugby, hockey and basketball, but without the flying brooms dreamed up by author J.K. Rowling. Seven players on each team try to score by throwing the quaffle, a deflated volleyball, into one of three hoops. The game ends when the golden snitch, a ball

City takes $8M hit on North Bayshore park fees

By Kevin Forestieri

Seeking to bring down the high cost of building housing in North Bayshore, Mountain View City Council members voted last week to cut park fees for a development in exchange for an acre of private open space.

Council members warned that they were not setting a precedent with the Sobrato Organization's project, calling it an anomaly. But some city leaders worry this is the latest in a string of concessions that will leave little cash to build a school within Mountain View's dense, tech park neighborhood.

Sobrato's project at 1255 Pear Ave., which was approved by the City Council months ago, is a mixed-use development of offices and 635 apartments, and marks the city's first foray into housing in North Bayshore. But Sobrato and other prospective developers in the area north of Highway 101 say the ever-increasing cost of park and school fees is threatening the viability of building the thousands of homes slated for the area.

Last month, the council agreed on a framework through which Sobrato could apply for an "open space credit" and construct a privately owned park on its property — accessible to the public — in exchange for a reduction in park fees equal to 75% of the value of the 1-acre park proposed in the project. According to city staff, that lowers the park fees Sobrato has to pay the city from $38.1 million to $30.4 million. The City Council approved the discount on a 5-2 vote at the April 9 meeting, with council members Margaret Abe-Koga and John McAlister opposed.

A similar compromise on school fees was approved when Sobrato's project came before the council for approval in October. The two school districts serving the area, Mountain View Whisman and Mountain View-Los Altos High, had asked for a combined $24.4 million from Sobrato to offset the cost of new students generated by the project, but the developer sought to pay roughly one-third that amount. The council split the difference, requiring Sobrato pay $12 million.

Escalating costs have been a major concern for the developers seeking to build homes in North Bayshore, specifically Google and Sobrato, whose representatives told the council in September that costs per apartment unit shot up by $120,000 in one

City leaves cannabis businesses high and dry

PERMIT PROCESS STALLS AS COUNCIL RECONSIDERS WHERE TO ALLOW LEGAL SALES

By Adam F. Hutton

Potential pot businesses in Mountain View have been left high and dry by the City Council, which delayed a scheduled lottery for a limited number of permits, and is keeping the applicants in the dark about their future.

Last year, the council voted to issue four licenses — two for storefront retail shops and two to delivery services. The city received applications from 10 would-be cannabis business owners and scheduled a lottery to select the winners in March.

But progress on the issue slowed in 2019 after last November's election saw two pro-cannabis-business council members ousted. The new majority on the City Council has since voted to revisit the regulations and, city staff said, the application process is on hold.

Those recent delays have the cannabis industry "beside themselves," said lobbyist Sean Kali-rai with the Silicon Valley Cannabis Alliance. He says Mountain View hasn't informed the people who applied for cannabis licenses about their status and hasn't responded to questions about when the process could resume.

"The real problem here is the lack of information going forward," Kali-rai said. "There seems to be no urgency in getting this resolved."

Former Mountain View Mayor

Lenny Siegel criticized the current council for putting off the lottery and keeping applicants in the dark.

"The delay is a problem because businesses have been investing on the chance that they might win the lottery and now they can't do business," Siegel said.

The Joads head out for California in “The Grapes of Wrath” at Los Altos Stage Company’s Bus Barn Theater.

‘THE GRAPES OF WRATH’

Los Altos Stage Company’s current production of “The Grapes of Wrath” is blessed with a mostly excellent cast, fine direction from Jeffrey Lo, a pretty set and even a good little barefoot band in the corner. What it’s missing is desperation, starvation, a sense of place and palpable death.

It is likely that no shortened version of John Steinbeck’s 1939 masterpiece can ever really accomplish what exists in the novel’s nearly 500 pages. Every page in Steinbeck’s Great Depression-set book is magnificent and powerful. Yes, horrible things happen to human beings — such as evil bankers and disastrous droughts — but in the end, the human spirit pulls us through.

In the story, Tom Joad is released from prison after only four years of a seven-year sentence for murder. The first thing family and friends ask is “Did you bust out?”

The family farm in Oklahoma has been bulldozed by the foreclosing bank and the family, after reading flyers offering jobs in California, has decided to migrate. On their trip they began to learn that it’s all a heartless scheme by farm owners. Thousands of Okies, Arkies and other ruined farmers come to California begging to work for pathetic wages and find the jobs are all taken and there is no land left for them to homestead their own farms.

But the Joads — and thousands of others — have no money left to return to their Dust Bowl homes and there is nothing left for them there anyway. The 12 people in the Joad group start dying or running off.

To put even a modest amount of Steinbeck’s tale on stage, a great deal of creativity is needed. The play does not really communicate the desperation of the Joads, as they struggle to find food for their children, and for Rose of Sharon, who is pregnant. Its weaknesses are mostly the fault of Frank Galati, who adapted it from the novel.

Lo’s cast is almost uniformly excellent, although only a few of them managed anything close to Okie accents. Jorge Luis Diaz is a very good Tom Joad. He is wounded after prison but recovering his strength and his endless sense of righteousness. Tom Joad stands up for people.

Judith Miller is great as Ma Joad. There is never a moment she doesn’t have a matriarchal sense of purpose and the strength to deliver.

Christopher Fitzer’s set is beautiful, with corrugated fiberglass and wood-beamed back wall, and a hanging flag in the corner. Lana Palmer’s sound design may be the best I’ve ever heard in the old Bus Barn Theater.

But while we are told the Joad family is traveling through dusty prairie, arid desert and fearfully high mountains, we don’t see them. We don’t feel them. Some projections — or something — would have helped us understand what the Joads were experiencing. And we are given little understanding about how terrible it really was.

The show runs through May 5 at the Bus Barn Theater, Los Altos Stage Company, 97 Hillview Ave., Los Altos. Tickets are $20-$38. Go to losaltosstage.org.

MAN HIT BY CAR

A 37-year-old San Jose woman was arrested Saturday after she allegedly hit her boyfriend with a car following a domestic dispute.

The victim, 32, told police that he and his girlfriend got into an argument at his home in the Whisman Station neighborhood over his phone and access to his social media account on Saturday, April 13, according to police spokeswoman Katie Nelson. During the altercation, the woman allegedly took the phone, left the home and tried to leave the area in a car.

The man attempted to stop the woman, but she allegedly accelerated and struck him. He hit his head and shoulder on the hood of the car, suffering injuries, Nelson said. He was later taken to El Camino Hospital for treatment, where he met with officers about the incident.

The woman later came to the police department to speak with officers, where she was arrested on suspicion of assault with a deadly weapon and inflicting corporal injury.

200-UNIT EXPANSION PITCHED FOR APARTMENT COMPLEX

Add one more massive building project to Mountain View's growing list.

The property management company Equity Residential is proposing a major expansion to nearly double the size of the Reserve at Mountain View apartments, located at 870 E. El Camino Real. If approved, the company intends to add 209 new apartments, including 25 below-market units. The complex currently has 180 units.

In order to expand, Equity would need to demolish 42 apartments that are currently occupied. Heading off anticipated concerns from the city, Equity officials are promising to take care of current residents who would get displaced by the construction. In a press release, company officials pledged to relocate tenants to nearby properties in their portfolio as they become available.

THE FUZZY INVASION BEGINS

Right on cue, spring weather is bringing with it a horde of caterpillars that can be seen dangling off tree branches and wriggling along playgrounds and park benches at Eagle Park. Western tussock moth caterpillars tend to hatch in droves starting in April and stick around until mid to late spring, when they spin cocoons and emerge as moths. Last year saw a particularly bad invasion in Mountain View, leading city parks staff to treat trees with insecticide to cull the numbers.

SyWest courts mobile home neighbors of Gateway development

WHILE GOOGLE WORKS WITH CITY, SYWEST CHATS UP PLANS AT SANTIAGO VILLA

By Adam F. Hutton

Google and SyWest, both major property owners of a disputed North Bayshore site targeted for redevelopment since 2013, are hoping to emerge as winners when Mountain View city staff redesigns their conflicting proposals.

Google, which acquired 8 acres of the Gateway site at the southeast corner of the site where Highway 101 meets Shoreline Boulevard thanks to a land-swap deal with LinkedIn, is hoping to win over the city.

SyWest, which owns the other 16 acres and already had approval to develop the whole site when it was partnered with LinkedIn, is hoping to win over the project's only residential neighbors.

Mountain View officials would like to see a cooperative use for the site in line with their future vision for North Bayshore, transforming from an office park to a mixed-use residential neighborhood.

Gary Kremen is focus of new book about internet's wild early days

FOUNDER OF MATCH.COM NOW REPRESENTS MOUNTAIN VIEW ON SANTA CLARA VALLEY WATER DISTRICT'S BOARD

By Kevin Forestieri

Before Mountain View elected him to lead a water utility agency, Gary Kremen was a maverick during the internet's Wild West days.

Kremen laid claim to worthless internet domain names that would soon become more valuable than gold, and tested a framework for internet dating that has since exploded into a thriving industry of its own. Claiming the domain "sex.com" would later pit him against a convicted felon — who stole the domain and insisted it was his from the start — in a legal battle that set precedents for digital ownership laws.

The bizarre and occasionally racy story is captured in a newly released book by David Kushner, titled "The Player's Ball: A Genius, a Con Man, and the Secret History of the Internet's Rise." Speaking at Books Inc. in downtown Mountain View on Thursday, Kushner said he found that Kremen was the perfect vehicle to describe the computer age's oft-overlooked part of its history, overshadowed by Apple's success story and Facebook's more recent breakout success.

"In between was this time of real innovation during the 90s, during the Wild West years of the internet," he said.

Kremen's most prominent venture was Match.com, a dating website company he founded in 1993 at a time when only a small fraction of Americans even had internet access. Kushner described Kremen as having a sort of foolhardy vision that the concept of online dating would take off, and that his venture would bring the most love to the world since Jesus Christ.

Riffing off of e-commerce order forms, Kremen told the audience Thursday that he thought he could take the dating personals typically found in newspapers and push that into the online realm, giving people a chance to list off personal attributes and what they're looking for in a relationship.

"I could have people fill something out about themselves, a profile, and they could put a description on it and I could find an algorithm that could find some matches on it," he said.

Done without thinking now, the idea of even sending an image or an "attachment" from one person to another using computers was novel. Despite the company growing at a fast rate from the start, Kremen said the initial reaction was that his proposal was nuts.

Finding a home for new youth mental health clinic

COUNTY FACING UPHILL BATTLE FOR RENTAL SPACE IN NORTH COUNTY

By Kevin Forestieri

An ambitious plan to open a North County youth mental health center is proving to be a challenge, beset by delays and escalating costs as Santa Clara County officials scour Palo Alto for a location.

The project, called Headspace, proposes creating two clinics in Santa Clara County that would serve as one-stop shops for youth ages 12 to 25 in need of mental health services. Psychiatrists, psychologists, clinicians and primary care doctors will all play a part. The hope is that local teens will feel a sense of ownership in order to quash the stigma of seeking help.

County officials have already found a suitable site for one Headspace center in San Jose and are working on the design. But the search has been difficult in the North County, with dozens of locations considered and ultimately rejected. County staff, partnering with the Stanford Center for Youth Mental Health and Wellbeing, looked at 30 properties — all in Palo Alto — and toured eight of them. Only one met the standards for the clinic, but the property owner rejected the county's inquiry last August.

The Peninsula's hot real estate market doesn't help. Headspace needs a whole lot of space — 6,000 square feet — and to be located near public transit. It's not clear why only Palo Alto is being considered, since the city's restrictive ordinances are compounding the challenge, according to a county staff report. For example, vacant first-floor retail space can only house retail services and can't be converted to a clinic use.

The first setback came quickly when county staffers concluded they had no chance of owning the Headspace centers, and would instead need to lease space for both locations. The original budget to fund the leasing costs and facilities improvement, projected to be $964,000, is now expected to be closer to $4 million.

GATEWAY

Council voted 6-1 to reject both developers' proposals and have city staff go back to the drawing board at its Feb. 21 meeting.

The association represents more than 300 homeowners in a mobile home park to the northeast of SyWest's property, which includes Century Cinema 16 and its sprawling parking lot.

As for why he would present neighbors with a plan the council had already turned down, Vierra said, "We didn't want to throw the drawings away and we don't want to throw the vision away." And when residents wanted to know whether there was any hope for negotiations to resume with Google, he said, "We still have different visions for the project."

Members of the neighborhood association say they want to be heard as the city and developers plan to bring thousands of new housing units and perhaps more than 1 million new square feet of office space to their backyard. "SyWest's development team was thoughtful and courteous while presenting their Gateway plan to us," said Bee Hanson, a Santiago Villa resident. "But residents expressed concern that it would exacerbate our existing traffic problems and do little to serve our large population of seniors."

Residents at Santiago Villa also commented that SyWest didn't come to meet with them until after the developer made its presentation to the City Council, not during the years of negotiations with Google, or LinkedIn before that.

The elected leader of the neighborhood association noted that the city hasn't reached out to its residents either.

"It is odd the city did not ask for community input from the developer," said Trey Bornmann, Santiago Villa Neighborhood Association's president. "We have monthly meetings and would love to help plan our own neighborhood and offer local insights into problems others can easily overlook. Neighborhood input should be a top consideration of the council when reviewing proposals."

The major difference between the proposals boils down to where the office space will be located on the site. SyWest says it needs the vast majority of the proposed space to subsidize the affordable housing and community space components of its proposal. Some residents said that it seemed like a high price to pay for a project with only 100 units of affordable housing and some commercial space with outdoor elements.

"It's depressing to think that housing is effectively a loss leader in a development like this," said Santiago Villa resident John Waters.

Meanwhile, a Google representative says the company is ready to follow the city's lead.

"We remain committed to the city-led master planning process, and look forward to their direction on next steps and how we can do our part to deliver housing, transportation solutions and other community benefits while fulfilling the policy objectives and requirements of the North Bayshore Precise Plan," said Michael Tymoff, Google's Mountain View district development director. ▀

PARK FEES

year to a total of $645,000. The increase was caused primarily by escalating park and school fees tied to property values.

Abe-Koga said the city's concessions are jeopardizing the chances of schools getting built in North Bayshore. School district officials say they're already facing a shortfall, and a loss of park fees means the city may not have money available to help. In the case of the Los Altos School District, the city pitched in $23 million in park fees for adjacent parkland, but it's not clear whether Mountain View will be able to do the same in North Bayshore.

"We're not collecting the fees that we should be collecting to help pay for the school that will need to be built," Abe-Koga said. "And if the school district is not being made whole and now we're not being made whole ... my question is, who is going to pay for it?"

The Mountain View Whisman School District will be receiving $5.5 million as part of its agreement with Sobrato, which includes the $1.4 million that Sobrato owed the district in state-mandated developer fees. Just the construction to house those future students would cost the district an estimated $5.3 million, Superintendent Ayinde Rudolph told the Voice in an email, but the proportionate cost for land adds an additional $20 million unmet obligation.

McAlister, calling in to the meeting from Massachusetts, said he was worried in general that there will be a dearth of park space in North Bayshore, and that Sobrato's project falls far short of the city's goal of 3 acres of open space per 1,000 residents.

"I am always concerned about giving away credit for parkland. We are going backwards on our open space, and if land is going for approximately $12 million to $15 million an acre out there, we are going to shortchange ourselves again," he said.

The majority of the council, however, wasn't inclined to block Sobrato's already approved project. Councilman Lucas Ramirez said he wasn't prepared to modify a project that already won the council's blessing before he took office, despite having "zero optimism" that a school will be built based on the fees being collected. Councilwoman Alison Hicks took a similar stance, adding that the parents who typically organize bond campaigns haven't shown a lot of enthusiasm for passing a measure to pay for a school serving North Bayshore's future residents.

Mountain View Whisman school board member Laura Blakely, who championed past school funding initiatives, including the Measure C parcel tax in 2008, said at a school board meeting last month that developers — not the taxpayers — should foot the bill for a school serving the neighborhoods planned in North Bayshore. Blakely also urged the council in October not to set a precedent for developers to shortchange local schools.

Councilman Chris Clark argued it was explicitly clear from the outset that Sobrato's project was a special case and the first North Bayshore project out the gate, so it shouldn't be seen as setting a precedent. Switching gears so deep into the process could also frighten other developers with the possibility that the council might demand more concessions in the 11th hour.

"I don't think it makes sense, and frankly it would be bad for our reputation to go back on our word and change our minds at the last minute as to what we expect from this developer," Clark said. ■

COMPUTER SCAM

An elderly Mountain View couple reported that a person claiming to be from Microsoft had found a virus on their computer and, after obtaining their bank information, drained nearly $2,000 from the account.

The 90-year-old man living on Limetree Lane told police on April 4 that he and his wife had received an alert on his computer about a possible computer virus in February. He called the phone number on the screen, which directed him to a person claiming to be from Microsoft, according to police Spokeswoman Katie Nelson.

The person on the phone requested several hundred dollars to fix the supposed virus on the computer, then called back on a later date stating they needed to refund the amount. Doing so required the couple's bank account information, the person reportedly told the couple, and a short time later nearly $2,000 was withdrawn from the account, Nelson said.

The couple later closed the account. There is no suspect description, Nelson said.

MENTAL HEALTH

on behalf of the county sent a letter of interest for a property at 2741 Middlefield Road on March 29. If the latest effort leads to a lease agreement, county officials expect to make improvements and have it operating sometime in the 2019-20 fiscal year.

County Supervisor Joe Simitian said Midtown Palo Alto would be a great location for Headspace, centrally located and a popular hangout spot for teenagers going back decades. But he said progress has been sluggish for turning Headspace into a reality despite an urgent need for the services, and he is “beyond frustrated” that there has yet to be a site secured for the North County location.

“It’s been three years since I sat down with people from Headspace in my office,” Simitian said at a recent Health and Hospital Committee meeting. “That’s a long time to still not have a site under contract.”

The delays could be partly due to the challenge of coordinating with three county departments involved in the real estate search, but Simitian wondered if Headspace faces an additional hurdle because the county can’t find a contractor in the North County to actually provide the mental health services. The county’s behavioral health director, Toni Tullys, confirmed that finding an outside provider is still a work in progress.

Headspace has been in the works since 2016 as a partnership between Stanford University and Santa Clara County that aims to transform the way children and young adults receive mental health care. The goal is to provide integrated mental health and primary care services all under one roof, which can help identify the early warning signs of mental illness and suicide, according to a description of the program. Patients will receive services regardless of whether they are on Medi-Cal or private insurance, uninsured or underinsured.

Although Headspace is based on a network of mental health centers with the same name in Australia, the county is expecting to adopt a new name — Allcove — in the coming months. Santa Clara County is the first to try out the Headspace model in the United States, but not in North America — there’s a similar program in British Columbia called Foundry that’s based on the Headspace model.

Launching the two mental health centers relies heavily on funding from California’s Mental Health Services Act, a 1% income tax on those making in excess of $1 million each year. So far, much of the tax’s revenues have yet to be spent. A portion of the funding is set aside specifically for “innovation” programs like Headspace. Santa Clara County officials are planning to spend just under $15 million in those innovation funds on Headspace over the course of four years, which had to receive formal approval from the Mental Health Services Oversight and Accountability Commission in August last year.

Commissioners at the time praised the concept for having the potential to reach people at a young age and address mental health problems before they become more severe, more difficult and more expensive to treat. There is significant interest in seeing how the model works in the U.S., with neighboring counties and jurisdictions as far away as New York, Michigan and Illinois all expressing interest in whether the Headspace model can survive and thrive in America’s more challenging health care environment. ■

CANNABIS

The city’s Environmental Planning Commission will consider proposed amendments to the cannabis ordinance on Wednesday, April 24. The City Council will have its first reading of those changes on May 23. Meanwhile, the 10 applicants are still paying rent, waiting and hoping to be awarded a license.

Councilman Lucas Ramirez, who voted with the council majority to reconsider the law, defended his decision.

“I believe the reason a majority of the council wanted to revisit this is because we were hearing legitimate concerns from the community about the clustering of businesses downtown,” Ramirez said. “I voted against an outright ban. But I voted to have a discussion about what kind of buffers are appropriate based on those concerns.”

With the future of legal cannabis sales in Mountain View hanging in the balance, a Bay Area assemblyman recently proposed a bill to force California cities to issue retail licenses if a majority of its voters opted to legalize recreational marijuana when it was on the 2016 ballot.

Council critics say reconsidering the decision to halt the permit process is a brazen attempt to discourage or prevent cannabis businesses from locating in Mountain View.

And that’s where Assembly Bill 1356 comes in.

Assemblyman Phil Ting, D-San Francisco, authored a bill that could require Mountain View and other cities to start issuing licenses. It proposes that cities in which a majority of voters supported legalization must issue one cannabis business license for every four licenses they issue to businesses that serve liquor. In 2016, nearly 68% of Mountain View residents voted for legalization.

Ting says local governments that stall on legalization subvert the will of the voters and put the legal marijuana market at risk.

“Californians voted to replace the illicit market with a legal system,” Ting said.

But that can only happen “if enough licenses are granted to meet existing demand,” he said. “This bill will ensure the legal market can succeed.”

Kali-rai says the bill should serve as a wake-up call to local governments, and a warning that if they fail to “implement good public policy, the state will take over.”

“Cities like Mountain View up and down the Peninsula should be acutely aware of the consequences of this Assembly bill,” he said.

Mountain View Mayor Lisa Matichak says Sacramento lawmakers ought to leave these kinds of decisions to local officials.

“I have concerns with any proposed legislation that takes away local control,” Matichak said. “There are many differences between the cities in California, making a one-size-fits-all approach to any proposed legislation problematic.”

Siegel, who was on the City Council when voters passed the Adult Use of Marijuana Act, said he also favors local control.

“I believe Mountain View residents by a strong majority support cannabis businesses in town, but I would prefer that those decisions be made locally,” Siegel said.

The proposed bill will have its first hearing before the Assembly’s Business and Professions Committee on April 23. If it were to pass the state Legislature and be signed by the governor, the bill would allow cities to opt out of the 1-to-4 ratio requirement if they ask voters to consider local prohibition on the 2020 ballot. ■

DELORES CASA

Delores Mae (Peiffer) Casa died at age 76 on Jan. 7 in New Rochelle, New York.

Born on July 6, 1942, in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, she graduated from John Harris High School and Penn State University, where she studied fashion merchandising. She spent her college summers in Ocean City, New Jersey, working on the shore.

After college she moved to New York where she worked as a buyer for Macy's, then as one of the earliest female information technology professionals at Colgate-Palmolive and later at Ciba-Geigy, where she worked for well over a decade designing software to help chemists create drugs.

She lived in Manhattan, Scarsdale, Tel Aviv and St. Louis and before retiring in Mountain View. Casa enjoyed reading, calligraphy, drawing, feeding hummingbirds, and the neighborhood cats, her family said.

She is survived by her daughter Christina Casa Usiak, son-in-law Martin Usiak, her sister Ruth Karabcievsky and brother-in-law Vladimir Karabcievsky.

Mountain View woman killed in El Camino collision

By Kevin Forestieri

A woman who was struck and killed on El Camino Real has been identified as a 59-year-old Mountain View resident, according to the Santa Clara County Medical Examiner-Coroner's Office.

The woman, Mary Ellen Cabanski Evers, was hit by a white sedan heading westbound on El Camino Real at the Palo Alto Avenue intersection around 8:20 p.m. on Saturday, April 13. She was pronounced dead at the scene despite life-saving efforts by the Mountain View Police Department, the Los Altos Police Department and the Mountain View Fire Department, according to Mountain View police spokeswoman Katie Nelson.

The driver remained at the scene and cooperated with the police department's investigation, Nelson said. Drugs and alcohol did not appear to be factors in the collision.

The intersection does not have a crosswalk, and police department records show there has been one other vehicle collision at the intersection of El Camino Real and Palo Alto Avenue in the last two years. The closest nearby intersection, Shoreline Boulevard and El Camino Real, had 15 collisions between 2017 and 2018, but none of them involved a bicyclist or pedestrian, according to police department records.

The collision Saturday marks the second pedestrian fatality in Mountain View this year. In a similar incident in late January, a man in his 60s was struck by a vehicle heading westbound on El Camino Real near Yuba Drive around 8:50 p.m., also at a location with no crosswalk. Witnesses told police at the time that the man was seen stepping off the sidewalk and into the roadway shortly before he was hit.

The investigation into the collision that killed Cabanski Evers is ongoing, Nelson said. ■ attached to a third-party player running around the pitch, is caught by one of the teams. Players must also avoid three bludgers, deflated dodgeballs, that competitors throw their way.

"The biggest surprise I came across is it being a full-contact sport," said Cullen Casey, a player on the Vipers. A player can be tackled to the ground when holding one of the four game balls — a move made difficult by the mandatory "broom" between their legs.

US Quidditch, the sport's governing body, requires players to use 32- to 42-inch long wooden or plastic poles rather than brooms that it once allowed.

"It's been amazing to see the sport evolve," said Sam Limegreen, a co-founder of the Silicon Valley Vipers who started playing the sport at Princeton University in 2008. "When I first started, the snitch was encouraged to be half court jester, half athlete. They came (on the field) with cream pies, bikes and water balloons."

US Quidditch no longer allows

"snitch antics," as Limegreen puts it. Players are also no longer allowed to don capes and are now required to wear mouth guards during games.

One aspect of the sport that has remained constant, however, is its inclusiveness.

"It's one of the most open communities to people who are different," said Chewy Shaw, a player on the Bay Area Breakers. "There's a clear focus on being inclusive of different gender identities."

No more than four players of the same gender can play on a team at the same time.

For people who may want to try their hand at quidditch, the Silicon Valley Vipers hold Sunday morning practices at Eagle Park for beginners.

"Everyone is welcome," said Limegreen. "Beginners can even feel free to come by our Tuesday and Thursday team practices now that we're in the offseason."

Practice times are updated regularly on both the Breakers' and the Vipers' Facebook pages. ■

Steve Purcell

September 17, 1951 – March 10, 2019

Stephen C. Purcell, age 67, passed away with his family by his side on Sunday, March 10, 2019, at Stanford Hospital in Palo Alto, California after he collided with a car on his bike. He was born on September 17, 1951, in San Francisco CA, son of Nancy (Foss) and Terrance Purcell. Steve grew up in Marin County with his sisters and brothers, Ginger, Lisa, Kevin, Brian, Sheila, Shawn and Pam.

Steve began working at the newly formed Xerox Palo Alto Research Center (PARC) in 1972 and received his B.S. in Mathematics from Stanford University a year later. At PARC, Steve worked in the Smalltalk group where he authored a program that animated images on the pioneering Alto workstation. After finishing his Masters in Electrical Engineering at MIT in 1977, he returned again to PARC. He made critical contributions to the birth of personal computing there and developed many patents, some of which were commercialized in Apple's first personal computers.

In the subsequent decades, Steve founded a series of high-tech startups and architected their successful media processing and graphics chips. In 1988, he became co-founder and Chief Architect of C-Cube Microsystems. Under his leadership the company accomplished a series of pioneering milestones in the global digital video market. He built the first single chip JPEG codec and the first multi-chip digital video MPEG codec, which was used by DirecTV to launch the first digital video broadcasting service in the US. C-Cube went public in 1994.

In 1993, Steve co-founded and served as CTO of Chromatic Research. The company created media accelerator chips and boards, delivered more than 100 million units, and was acquired by ATI in 1998. From 2002 to 2004, Steve worked as a video architect at Nvidia before spearheading two more media and graphics processing startups. He began consulting in 2009, enabling him to focus on his family and passions of biking, building electric-motor-assisted bicycles, and super lightweight backpacking.

Steve was a brilliant engineer, a formative mentor, and a loving husband and father with the most kind, gentle spirit. He pushed himself to the furthest point possible whether as an innovator, working late into the night on the technology behind one of his 81 patents, or as a formidable athlete, touring across the Alps for 10 summers in a row, biking up through all of the 40+ highest mountain passes.

He is survived by his wife Carolyn Purcell, children Megan Arzaga (Jerome) and Colleen Purcell (Shyam), and granddaughter Amara Mireya Arzaga. Always the patient and supportive friend, he will be greatly missed.

County's fourth case of measles confirmed

BAY AREA 'SWIMMING IN MEASLES' AFTER EIGHTH CASE REPORTED

By Kevin Forestieri

The United States is on pace to have the worst measles outbreak since 1994, with 555 cases across 20 states since Jan. 1 and four confirmed cases in Santa Clara County, public health officials said Tuesday.

Calling it a major public health concern that strains county resources, Public Health Officer Sara Cody said the country is "swimming in measles," including 21 cases in California, eight of which are in the Bay Area. Unlike places like Brooklyn, which are experiencing localized outbreaks, the four cases in Santa Clara County all appear to be "independently imported," meaning they likely originated from measles outbreaks elsewhere in the world and were not spread within the county.

Unlike past cases, which prompted county health officials to list all of the potential dates, times and places that residents could have been exposed to measles, the latest confirmed case of measles came with a short statement by the Santa Clara County Public Health Department saying that the public health risk is "very low."

Four cases — three of which were found in adult patients and one in a child — may not seem like much in a county of nearly 2 million residents, but Cody said investigating each case is "incredibly resource intensive" because of the sheer size of the county and the potential for contact with the infection.

The last big uptick in measles was in 2014, when there were 667 cases in the United States over the course of the whole year. At 555 cases as of the first week of April, the country is slated to quickly outpace that number.

At a recent county Health and Hospital Committee meeting, Cody said she is "very concerned" about preserving Santa Clara County's high vaccination rates against all preventable diseases, particularly measles because it is so highly contagious. Parents can no longer cite personal belief exemptions to avoid the Measles, Mumps, and Rubella (MMR) vaccine for their children, but some physicians are exploiting a loophole by signing off on fictitious medical exemptions.

"There are some providers, who are known to the community who don't want to vaccinate their child, that will sign off on their medical exemption," Cody said.

Although some school districts in Santa Cruz and Marin counties saw a decline in vaccinations in recent years, Mountain View's track record remains solid. Mountain View Whisman School District's MMR vaccination rates fall anywhere from 95% at Castro Elementary School to 99% at Huff Elementary and Crittenden and Graham middle schools, which is consistent with the rate at schools in the Los Altos School District.

Preschools and child care centers in the city, both public and private, also have MMR vaccination rates in excess of 98%, including the German International School of Silicon Valley, Action Day Primary Plus, the Mountain View Parent Nursery School and Google's child care center on the former Slater Elementary School campus.

Cody said those rates need to remain high in order to protect the small population that can't be vaccinated for a medical reason, particularly infants who don't get their first shot of the MMR vaccine until they are a year old.

"If the people around them are not vaccinated, they can't be protected," she said. "The only way to protect your baby from becoming really ill from measles is to ensure everyone in contact with your baby gets vaccinated."

Information about the measles is available on the county's website at tinyurl.com/SCC-measles2019.

INTERNET

"Most people thought it was pretty crazy. 'Won't people know how to find me? Won't people think I'm a loser, or I'm easy? What if they are a stalker?'" Kremen said, rattling off the list of questions he would face.

The epiphany, he said, was that he needed to encourage women to sign up first, modeling the questions and matching to their needs. Some of his first success came from the more "desperate" guys working at tech companies in the area, he said, so it didn't take too much encouragement to lure them.

"What we did was market it to nascent groups where women might be online. My idea was that every woman can bring 100 men," he said.

Kushner's book takes a deep dive into a major standoff between Kremen and another online innovator of sorts, Stephen Michael Cohen, over the domain name sex.com. Kremen had registered it in 1994 and sat on it for a while. He received a notice one day that Cohen was claiming to own the digital property, and at one point tried to trick Kremen by impersonating the U.S. patent office over the phone, claiming he had trademarked the site.

After sifting through Cohen's hard drive, which came out during the lawsuit's discovery phase, Kushner said Kremen's adversary was like an enigmatic bond villain — a locksmith with a private investigator's license and enough tech know-how to infiltrate the voicemail on Kremen's phone by altering his caller ID. One judge commented that Cohen possessed "boundless enthusiasm and bounded integrity."

What was clear by the end of the battle, Kremen said, was that Congressional lawmakers needed to do something about the growing number of records that have no paper trail and are instead floating around on a server somewhere in a digital format. Laws and court precedent didn't exist for Kremen's crusade to keep sex.com, which dragged past the turn of the century before reaching a resolution.

Cohen is still out there somewhere, Kremen said, claiming that he's operating dubious businesses in Mexico that include a "phony" online bank and a pharmacy selling counterfeit Viagra — always with an eye towards taking advantage of the weak and less fortunate. Kremen said Cohen was also an early adopter of cryptocurrencies.

As for Kremen, he's kept busy with several ventures including a water conservation software company, and being elected to the Santa Clara Valley Water District's board of directors in 2014. He represents the District 7, which encompasses Mountain View, Palo Alto and Los Altos.

Co-founder of CHAC dies at 88

DODIE ALEXANDER LED LOCAL MENTAL HEALTH NONPROFIT FOR 19 YEARS

By Kevin Forestieri

Dolores “Dodie” Alexander, the founder and longtime leader of the Community Health Awareness Council (CHAC) in Mountain View, died March 20 at age 88.

In 1973, Alexander co-founded CHAC, a mental health resource for children and adolescents. She led the nonprofit from 1973 to 1992 as executive director, crafting a partnership with local cities that ensures public dollars help support youth in need of mental health services. CHAC provides a range of counseling, therapy and substance abuse prevention programs with sliding scale fees, and no one is denied services based on their ability to pay.

CHAC grew out of a grass-roots effort by community members, mostly women, who came together over a shared concern about drug and alcohol abuse among adolescents in Mountain View, Los Altos and Los Altos Hills. Rather than rely solely on private donations, Alexander and other CHAC leaders sought to create a new Joint Powers Authority (JPA) between the three city governments, along with the four school districts in the area at the time.

The partnership made sense at the time, said Joan MacDonald, one of CHAC’s founding board members. She said the police chief of Los Altos in the 1970s readily conceded that officers were ill-trained and ill-equipped to deal with kids on drugs and alcohol and lacked expertise on mental health. School districts had a clear reason to support the nonprofit’s mission from the start.

“If the students are suffering in whatever way they are suffering they weren’t able to do the best job of performing, they couldn’t focus on school, they were truant, they were sometimes disruptive in class,” MacDonald said. “CHAC’s presence on campus made a significant difference.”

While Alexander helped create CHAC, she was reluctant to become the organization’s leader, MacDonald said. The first executive director had a divergent opinion from the board on the focus of the newly founded nonprofit and left soon after. The interim director who followed was quickly hired away by El Camino Hospital.

“The board, unbeknownst to Dodie, decided that she was really the person who would know what we were after and would help us move forward,” she said. “It was a no-brainer for us, but she was shocked.”

MacDonald said Alexander turned out to be the perfect fit as executive director. Not only was she good at asking for funding from the JPA partners — no one could turn her down — but she was relentlessly positive, friendly and supportive, which elevated the mood around CHAC’s office and pushed employees to work harder, MacDonald said.

“She was like that with every single person who worked there, even when she had to tell them they needed to change something that wasn’t working or had a criticism,” MacDonald said. “She found a way to make it positive.”

CHAC’s scope expanded beyond substance abuse and incorporated mental health therapy, aimed at helping families and children struggling with depression and anxiety. Current CHAC clients may also be experiencing post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), neglect, domestic violence, child abuse, divorce, financial stress and homelessness.

“CHAC is able to help families and individuals cope with a wide range of issues,” said Sandy Bergan, CHAC’s board president. “I truly believe that the community that I live in is a better place because of CHAC, and I have Dodie Alexander and the other women from 1973 to thank.”

As CHAC’s role in the community expanded to meet growing demand for services that are otherwise limited and cost-prohibitive, so too did the nonprofit’s need for funding. With a budget now deeply reliant on service contracts and private donations, less than half of its money comes from the original public agencies that formed the JPA.

It was quickly apparent, as clinical supervisors worked alongside counselors and talked to students and families, that alcohol and drug abuse were not the root cause of the problems, and that something more was driving kids to substance abuse. The decision made CHAC one-of-a-kind in the area, addressing mental health at a time when people would rather stick their heads in the sand.

“The fact that we were talking about it out loud was shocking to some people, and in a way it was hard to get money from others because they weren’t clear about the need, they didn’t think that it happened in our communities,” MacDonald said. “To an extent the stigma is still here ... some people still have this naive view that all you have to do is snap out of it, and we know that’s not true.”

Before it relocated in 2013 to its current headquarters on the corner of El Camino Real and View Street, CHAC’s downtown location at 711 Church St. was named the “Dodie Alexander House” in honor of her role founding the organization. In 1982, she was honored with a Community Service Award, in 1997 the Town Crier named her to its Honor Role of 50 Who Made a Difference, and the California State Legislature recognized her for her many contributions to youth, her family said.

Alexander is survived by her five children, eight grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Services will be held at 11 a.m. on Saturday, April 27, at Christ Church Los Altos, located at 1040 Border Road in Los Altos.

In lieu of flowers, the family prefers that memorial donations be made to CHAC at chacmv.org. CHAC Executive Director Marsha Deslauriers announced on Monday, April 15, that the nonprofit will also establish a Dodie Alexander Memorial Fund for those donations, which will go toward paying for counseling services targeted at substance abuse support. ▀

Do your part for our world

By Jamie Minden

As I am sure you all know, the recent United Nations climate report estimated that we have until 2030 to reduce our emissions by 80 percent or we will not be able to keep the global temperature change from rising above 2 degrees Celsius. If this happens, there is no hope left for our species or our world. It's not about saving our grandchildren anymore, it's about saving ourselves.

But unfortunately, some people still do not see that surviving as a species will involve major lifestyle changes. They are okay with recycling every once in a while, but do not want to commit to remodeling the way we commute. They could tolerate a few more bike lanes, but they would not use them. But the thing is, we all need to realize that life will be very different in the future — that is a fact. It is our choice whether we want to welcome that difference by adapting to tougher policies, or to perish from it. Merely a few years ago, the entire city of Mountain View was run on fossil fuel-generated electricity. Now, nearly every business and household runs on clean energy, and Mountain View is looking forward to its very first Earth Day celebration. Progress is being made — just not fast enough.

Yes, a bullet train is necessary. And bike lanes can be fun and safe. In Amsterdam, the multi-level parking garages are not for cars, they're for bikes. And every day they are full to the brim. Besides, this is Silicon Valley. We surely have the power to revolutionize the sustainable energy industry, and make money doing it too. Forbes predicts that the United States' renewable energy business is worth $3 trillion.

Anyone want to cash in?

Get involved in our community. You don't have to become Greta Thunberg (the Swedish teenager known for her climate activism), but you can join a local protest group, or organize community education events. Replace your gas-burning water heater with an electric one. Turn your company in a more sustainable direction. Explain to your cousin that climate change does not mean that you cannot form a snowball, it means that the global temperature is rising. Leave your car at home and dust off your bike. Every great change that has ever occurred started with one person with an idea.

People always remark that it is up to my generation to make things right. But my generation does not have time. In 11 years, I will be 28, barely starting my career, and it will already be too late to turn things around. It is up to you. We only have 11 years left, so let us make them count.

Let us give it our all, and put up a fight. Because once our emissions are past the tipping point, we cannot go back. Our chance is now. Every living person has a responsibility to do their part, no matter how small.

This could be like the moon race, with countries racing to be the first to prove the extent of their technological innovation. Climate change will be the struggle that defines every generation alive today. While the "greatest generation" had to stand up and tackle two world wars head-on, we now have no other choice but to bear the burden of the cards we have been dealt, and fight for our futures.

Look at this from a patriotic standpoint, and do your part for our country. Do your part for our world. I want YOU to join the U.S. climate protection movement.

■ LETTERS

VOICES FROM THE COMMUNITY

SHARING IS THE SOLUTION

At the April 8 Los Altos School District board meeting, families expressed their outrage with the proposal to relocate Egan ("Parents rally against moving Egan to Mountain View," April 12). The community believes, and I agree, that the proposed Bullis Charter School/LASD agreement is not in the best interests of our children. We all want peace, but not at any cost. We must find a better solution.

I request the LASD and BCS boards work together to implement a groundbreaking district/charter collaboration that benefits all students. I propose:

- Joint collaboration to improve programs;
- Share gyms, labs and specialized teaching spaces.
- Jointly hire specialized staff for electives.
- Collaborate on staff training.
- Joint after-school programs.
- Share day care facilities.
- LASD offers access to programs serving special education and low-income students.

Facilities sharing to accommodate 900-1,200 BCS students:

- Two collocated schools at Mountain View site to help serve 800+ neighborhood students.

- 300-400 students K-5 for LASD.
- 300-400 students K-5 for BCS.
- 600-800 BCS students share Egan and/or Blach with LASD.
- All neighborhood schools preserved.
- Dramatic increase in facilities and field space for BCS.

Benefits both LASD and BCS families:

- Facilities certainty.
- State-of-the-art neighborhood schools in Mountain View.
- Learn from each other's innovative programs.

Benefits the entire community:

- Reduced and dispersed traffic.
- End lawsuits and divisiveness.
- Allows community to heal and move forward together.
- Efficient use of taxpayer funds.

We can implement a win-win solution without painful loss to any single community group. We must urge the BCS and LASD boards to consider collaborative alternatives to relocating Egan.

Sangeeth Peruri, former LASD board trustee and president

CALTRAIN BIKE CARS

Unless Caltrain's new seven-car electric car design includes 84 bikes per train with seats in view of bikes to limit station dwell time, the current Joint Powers Board will be ignoring the recommendation of their 2015 JPB predecessors, who mandated to staff that a ratio of eight seats to each bike space be preserved on trains in the interest of both carbon-neutral transportation and minimizing taxpayer subsidies for more costly means of accessing Caltrain stations.

Bicyclists are currently being bumped from trains with 77 bike spaces available on the average train. Bike-share companies do not serve all of the corridor and Caltrain will lose cycling passengers to automobiles. Please think of the climate and the environment that we leave for the next generation and provide 84 bikes per train with seats in view of bikes to maintain the commitment that the 2015 JPB made to support cleaner transportation choices.

*Scott Yarbrough
San Francisco*

DISTRICT MERGER

In regards to Los Altos and Mountain View Whisman school districts' budget woes, there's a solution that has worked well in the past. It is alluded to in Mountain View Whisman's very name:

district merger.

In July 2010, the Voice covered the county's grand jury report that (stated) unifying MVWSD, LASD, and the Mountain View-Los Altos High School District as one K-12 district would annually save $10 million.

The only way to truly stabilize funding, pay K-8 teachers more, and most importantly, streamline and synchronize support systems for students would be a K-12 unified school district combining Mountain View and Los Altos, similar to Palo Alto Unified School District. On the local level, not much would change — everyone would still go to their local neighborhood school. On the Bullis LASD-Egan issue, a unified K-12 MVLA would also change the character of Bullis by broadening its diversity. A unified K-12 MVLA would open up many more powerful possibilities regarding the future of schools in North El Camino.

District offices in the past did not support it because it would mean some district administrators and board trustees would lose their positions, but voters today should take the 2010 grand jury report as a serious proposition.

Christopher Chiang, former MVWSD board trustee

■ RESTAURANT REVIEW

Worth squawking about

NO BONES TO PICK WITH FOWL PLAY'S TASTY CHICKEN

By Edward Gerard Fike
Photos by Magali Gauthier

Last April, Andrea Leslie was nearly ready to debut her chicken restaurant — slated to be the West Coast's first franchise of Washington, D.C.-based The Chickery — in Palo Alto's Barron Park neighborhood. Having checked off key milestones like training in Toronto, equipping the kitchen and hiring her opening crew, the Gilroy resident was feeling confident and eager. Then came the bombshell: Leslie received a legal notice informing her of The Chickery's overnight demise. She was ordered to sever all ties with the chain by a chef who asserted exclusive rights to the concept.

"I was shocked," said Leslie of the cease-and-desist letter. "Even though I had the option to walk away, I quickly decided that I would completely overhaul the operation and make it my own."

► See FOWL PLAY, page 18

Top: The "hot mess" sandwich has onion rings, fried chicken, lettuce, tomato and Roquefort cheese and is drizzled with spicy buffalo sauce and Roquefort dressing.

FOWL PLAY

Leslie got to work on a radical revamp, fine-tuning original recipes and creating a restaurant that offered full-service quality in a quick-service format. Less than three months later, Fowl Play Roadside Chicken took flight.

Fowl Play is on El Camino Real, about a mile south of Page Mill Road. Its sparsely decorated, diminutive dining room has space for only two tables and eight stools, lined up along two intersecting windows facing the street and the parking lot. Two outdoor picnic benches boost seating capacity in warmer months. The small footprint hasn't yet hindered the mostly takeout eatery, though standing-room-only status could come as more diners discover the restaurant's enticing menu.

I found both of Fowl Play's core offerings — tangerine and sage-roasted rotisserie chicken and crispy, buttermilk-fried, all-white chicken — to be juicy, flavorful and generously portioned. Choosing which variety to order is a matter of preference, not quality. Notably, the hand-dipped and battered fried chicken has a light, non-greasy texture. I didn't experience a fried chicken "hangover" — no need for a post-meal nap or a fistful of antacids after indulging.

While both styles of bird can be ordered no-frills style from the "Rotisserie," "Southern Fried" and "Feast" sections of the menu, Fowl Play also incorporates its signature item into an inventive variety of salads, sandwiches and sliders.

The first-rate Asian chicken salad ($10.50) featured a crunchy bed of fresh romaine lettuce topped with a heaping serving of roasted chicken, red cabbage, edamame, peanuts and more, tossed in a tangy sesame vinaigrette dressing. The "squawky yaki bowl" ($10.50)

— be prepared for the menu's fondness for poultry puns — was another substantial, healthy option. The bowl's jasmine rice foundation was suitably soft and sticky. Fresh vegetables and roast chicken topped with a deep, rich teriyaki sauce completed the savory dish.

From the "Sammies" section, I opted for "the ultimate" ($9.50), a hearty combination of lightly-breaded fried chicken, choice of cheese, lettuce, pickles, tomatoes and mayonnaise on a corn-dusted bun. The sandwich hit all the right notes except for the paltry slice of pepper jack. The aptly named “hot mess” ($9.50) was a towering fried chicken sandwich stacked with crispy onion rings, lettuce, tomato and Roquefort cheese, all drizzled with spicy buffalo sauce and creamy Roquefort dressing. This bold-flavored behemoth is the restaurant’s top seller, according to Leslie.

Standout sides included the crisp, non-oily tater tots and baked beans with bacon drenched in a sweet sauté of molasses and brown sugar (both $3.25 small/$4.95 large). I was elated with my order of elote ($3.25), Mexican street corn with mayonnaise, Parmesan and zingy Tajín seasoning. I was less enamored with the “cordon bleu mac ‘n’ cheese” ($3.25 small/$4.95 large), a bland mélange of chicken, ham, bacon, melted

Swiss and cheddar cheeses, soggy noodles and a dusting of cornbread crumb topping that was too granulated to make an impression.

From the out-of-the-box dessert menu, which includes churros and a housemade waffle cone with seasonal pie filling, I chose loukoumades ($4.95), warm Greek donuts topped with honey and pecans. The exquisite pastries were surprisingly light and airy. Try to save room for these doughy delights.

Fowl Play’s service is genuine, attentive and at times, like a one-woman show. During each of my visits, Leslie guided me and other patrons through the menu, highlighted her favorites and checked in multiple times. Other staff members, while helpful and courteous, could not match the owner’s buoyant energy.

The restaurant takes a novel and heartwarming approach to community outreach. The Fowl Play Bucks program invites customers to leave donations for less privileged diners in a jar by the ordering counter. The cash is then converted to paper “bucks” and pinned to a half-wall beneath the register. Guests needing assistance with their bill can redeem available bucks toward the cost of their meal.

Though we’ll never know how The Chickery would have fared in Palo Alto, I’m guessing that locals would prefer a home-grown concept with a wholesome menu and a personal touch. The ideal candidate? I suspect Fowl Play. ■

Elle Fanning stars in "Teen Spirit."

LD ENTERTAINMENT/BLEEKER STREET MEDIA

'Teen Spirit' smells familiar but has its charms

ELLE FANNING PROVES SHE CAN SING IN ROLE AS RISING POP STAR

★★★1/2 (Aquarius)

Is there an unwritten rule that actors-turned-directors must debut with pop-music dramedies? Tom Hanks first went behind the camera for 1996's "That Thing You Do!" and Bradley Cooper helmed last year's "A Star Is Born." Now Max Minghella ("The Social Network") helms "Teen Spirit," another take on the rise-from-obscurity pop-star archetype.

The movie serves mostly as a vehicle for star Elle Fanning, who provides her own vocals in the film's multiple performance sequences and, more importantly, provides the film its soul of quietly defiant determination.

An English farm girl from the Isle of Wight, Fanning's Violet lives with her Polish-immigrant mother (Agnieszka Grochowska) and the horse that seems to be her only joy. Her need to sing — acceptably in a church choir and compulsively at an open-mic — reflects a girl desperate to throw off the yoke of her working-class fate and choose her own path. The open-mic nights introduce her to an aging, slovenly, pot-bellied drinker whose appearance belies his experience. This is Vlad (Zlatko Buric, drily effective), who offers her a ride home and, soon enough, his services as a manager when Violet needs a "guardian" to bless her participation in a reality-show singing competition called "Teen Spirit."

Minghella's script includes all the basics: temptations of fame, a scrappy manager taking his last shot at redemption, a heart-tugging surrogate father-daughter relationship. There's not a bit here that hasn't been done many times before, but Fanning's subtle performance, well observed by Minghella, puts meat on the bones that are the film's clichés.

Obviously it doesn't hurt "Teen Spirit" to have Rebecca Hall ("Vicky Cristina Barcelona") in its side pocket, albeit in the undemanding role of the Simon Cowell-esque pop guru who dangles contracts to lure Violet from Vlad.

"Teen Spirit" wrestles with its own vapidness, but the gambit of keeping the characters' yearning just barely concealed lends the film just enough tension — and heart — to hold interest between flashy musical numbers.

Rated PG-13 for some suggestive content, and for teen drinking and smoking. One hour, 32 minutes.

MOVIE REVIEWS

PETERLOO ★★★1/2

Seven-time Oscar nominee Mike Leigh makes no concession to the passive viewer with his new historical film "Peterloo." Instead, he bustles his audience into a time machine and transplants them to a time and place — 1819 England — for full immersion into the physical and social landscape where the politically charged Peterloo Massacre played out between a pro-democracy working class and an elitist government. The personality clashes within the opposing groups add texture to the otherwise dryly recounted economic realities and political skulduggery. Underpinning it all, Leigh's team of artists collectively puts many period films to shame with their unshowy but astonishingly detailed work, including the beautiful photography of Dick Pope and the just-so costumes of Jacqueline Durran. If "Peterloo" is somewhat medicinal, with no spoonfuls of sugar in sight, it also is richly realized, a remarkable achievement of dramatized history with the understanding that the more things change, the more they stay the same. Rated PG-13 for a sequence of violence and chaos. Two hours, 34 minutes. — P.C.

SHAZAM! ★★★

Nearly 78 years after his first live-action appearance, "Shazam!" returns to the big screen to share the same cinematic universe as Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, The Flash, and Aquaman. Played by Zachary Levi, Shazam is the magically adult form bestowed on 14-year-old foster child Billy Batson (Asher Angel) by an ailing wizard also named Shazam (Djimon Hounsou). The older Shazam — last of the Council of the Wizards, keeper of the Rock of Eternity — needs someone "strong in spirit, pure in heart" to assume the mantel. The old wizard passes over young Thaddeus Sivana (Ethan Pugiotto) in 1974, but the boy remains obsessed with the great power that escaped him. Grown into his 50s, the present-day Sivana (Mark Strong) keeps a watchful eye for the power of Shazam, but settles for the power of the Seven Deadly Sins. Meanwhile, young Philadelphian Batson gets the power Sivana craved for decades. At over two hours, the film goes on a bit long, but the setting and circumstances of the climactic action sequence have a nice thematic ring to them. "Shazam!" plays like DC's answer to Marvel's "Ant-Man": a family-friendly, comical comic-book adventure. Rated PG-13 for intense sequences of action, language and suggestive material. Two hours, 12 minutes. — P.C.

DUMBO ★★★1/2

"Dumbo" is a strange beast, indeed. I don't mean the character of an elephant born with ears so big he can flap them and take flight. And I don't mean the 1941 Disney animated feature starring that elephant. No, I mean Disney's new live-action, CGI-heavy reimagining of "Dumbo," which turns out to be part bland kids-and-animals adventure and part Coen Brothers-esque period satire. The former will get by with kids, and the latter may get by with adults, but few are likely to have an euphoric experience seeing this elephant fly (again). As is so often the case with the films of Tim Burton, "Dumbo" is less than the sum of its parts, but some of those parts are pretty nifty. Burton's film, as scripted by Ehren Kruger, has morphed into a fable of modernized entertainment business models and the handling and packaging of intellectual property. If you're thinking that seems like strange thematic material for a PG Disney movie aimed at families, you're right! Though the film is a bit clumsy with the story, "Dumbo" has enough wit to deserve an audience. Rated PG for peril/action, some thematic elements, and brief mild language. One hour, 52 minutes. — P.C.

Highlighting the Mountain View
and Midpeninsula
Real Estate market

Derk Brill's success in the Mid-Peninsula real estate market is no secret. Derk has been a Mountain View resident for over 20 years, having raised his family in Waverly Park. His experience and expertise have enabled Derk to attain the status of top producing agent in the local Alain Pinel office, as well as being among the elite agents in the United States.

Derk's philosophy of client service differs significantly from most top producing agents. He offers a hands-on, personal approach to the sale of a home. This extends from the preparation process through the close of escrow. Rather than handing a client off to a series of assistants, Derk manages every aspect of the sale including property prep, marketing, open houses, negotiation, and closing. This provides a seamless transaction from beginning to end.

Alain Pinel Realtors' partnership with Luxury Portfolio International ensures that in addition to local and national marketing, Derk's clients benefit from extensive international exposure through a large network of brokerages throughout the world.

If you are considering selling or buying a home in the mid-peninsula, contact Derk to leverage the expertise of a true local.

EXCELLENT VALUE IN WEST MENLO

3880 Alameda de las Pulgas, Menlo Park

Offered at $3,488,000

Located moments from Sharon Heights and Stanford amenities, this beautiful 5 bedroom, 4 bath home of 3,680 square feet (per county) is one of the best values in all of Menlo Park, Palo Alto, and Los Altos. When compared to similarly-sized homes sold in the area over the last 12 months, this property offers a great opportunity to enter this prestigious neighborhood, an incredible price per square foot, and extraordinary appreciation potential. You'll love entertaining in the double-height living room, refined family room with a wet bar and built-in media center, or the private and tranquil backyard. Nearby amenities include Michelin-star Madera, Stanford Hills and Sharon Park, Sand Hill Road venture capitalist firms, and the Gold Ribbon Las Lomitas schools.

Selling your Mountain View home?

First, meet with Michael Repka of the DeLeon Realty team.

Unlike most real estate agents, Michael holds two law degrees, including an LLM in taxation from NYU School of Law, and has years of experience as a real estate and tax attorney, giving his clients a unique advantage. Further, Michael studied negotiation and conflict management in graduate school at Rutgers School of Law and Rutgers Graduate School of Business, as well as Harvard University. In addition, the expertise and marketing available through the team at DeLeon Realty are the very best in the business.

Meet with Michael to discuss any preliminary tax and legal questions about selling your home, and let him tell you more about what makes DeLeon Realty's innovative approach to real estate so successful. There is no cost or obligation for this consultation.
